CLEVELAND INDIANS

Although no one gives the Indians much of a chance at anything, Cleveland will pull off some surprises.

After finishing last in 1983 with its 18th losing season in the last 24 years, Indian Manager Pat Corrales said his team has to get better. He's right.

Two Indian additions that will bolster a sometimes impotent offense will be Atlanta Braves' expendables, outfielders Brett Butler and Brook Jacoby. Both have the potential to tear the league apart.

Mike Hargrove, Andre Thornton and Ron Massey will provide bat support.

The big question mark will be if Rick Sutcliffe, Neal Heaton and Bert Blyleven can have outstanding seasons. If they do "hello second place."

DETROIT TIGERS

The Tigers are only a few years away from giving the Orioles their only serious challenge in the league.

Detroit has a formidable infield that includes the likes of Alan Trammell and Lou Whitaker.

Potential power comes from Kirk Gibson, Darrel Evans and Chet Lemon. But potential is all it is.

The Tigers boast a respectable pitching staff, but Jack Morris and Dave Rozema are not Mickey Lolich and Denny McLain.

MILWAUKEE BREWERS

The Brewers are overrated and this is the year people finally will notice.

Teams are afraid of the tremendous powers of those mighty Brewers, but Cecil Cooper, Ted Simmons and Ben Ogilive just aren't that good.

TORONTO BLUE JAYS

The Canadians gave the Orioles a scare last year, but won't be around long enough to pose a threat this year.

Toronto's pitching staff is just too weak. If the Blue Jays could find three or four Dave Stiebs, then watch out.

If by an act of God, Willie Mays Aikens is allowed to play, the Blue Jays could just knock on fourth place's door.

BOSTON RED SOX

The Red Sox do try. They just don't seem like they can cut it.

The mighty Jim Rice has never been the same without teammate Fred Lynn and he alone cannot pull a club from the cellar to glory.

NEW YORK YANKEES

Who cares? The Yankees have a new manager. Who cares? Dave Winfield is back, still trying to prove he is a superstar. Who cares? The Yankees are crying because Goose Gossage is gone. Who cares? Dave Righetti will be in the bullpen. Who cares?
