

Corncobs plan harvest to fill membership bin

Since football season, about 25 percent of UNL's Corncobs have shucked the spirit group. But this is normal, the group's new president said.

Cathy Uhlmann, who was elected in March, said membership usually drops after football season because the group doesn't have as many things to do.

They are highly visible during football season when they sell red carnations and form the human tunnel that the football team runs through. But they also try to sponsor a sporting event each month after football season ends.

Uhlmann said the group's new officers will attempt to solve the problem of declining membership, as will the group's membership drive. The Corncobs have scheduled a rush party April 10 at the Nebraska Union.

Besides new officers, the Corncobs also have a new co-advisor Gary Fouraker.

Fouraker said spirit is important for support and unity of the school. Working with the athletic department give the Corncobs the chance to rally the needed support and unity of the student body at sporting events, he said.

"The more input students have, the better the school will be all around," Fouraker said.

Uhlmann said the image that Corncobs is a group for fraternity and sorority members is wrong. On the contrary, "we have quite a few independents in Corncobs," he said.

Man and mousetrap vs. time and space

By Jim Berryman

Mousetraps will snap Friday afternoon in the Nebraska Union, but they won't be catching any mice.

The mousetraps will power tiny cars at the fifth annual Mousetrap Powered Car Race, which begins at 2:30 p.m. in the Main Lounge of the Nebraska Union.

Mitchell Ferrill, a senior mechanical engineering major and chairman of the event, said the engineering honorary Pi Tau Sigma is sponsoring it to help promote Engineering Week.

"It's a competition in which engineering students can build a car powered by a mousetrap and try to get it to go as close to three meters as possible," Ferrill said. The cars, which will have to carry a two-kilogram brick, will be penalized if they are under the three-meter mark, and penalized doubly if they go over the mark, he said.

Of the 50 students entered in the event, 45 are from Nebraska high schools. The remaining five entrants are UNL students, he said. Last year, only 10 students participated in the high school division and five participated in the college division, he said.

Gary Aurand, a UNL sophomore from Chapman, and last year's college-division winner, will be back Friday in an attempt to reclaim his title. But, Aurand said, he isn't sure how this year's competition stacks up.

However tough the competition may be, Ferrill said, the mousetrap event has attracted national attention, including NBC-TV. The event is open to the public, free of charge, he said.
