

God, religion, morality topics of Lincoln philosophy conference

Important issues of 13 research papers will be presented today through Saturday at a philosophy of religion conference.

Conference Director Robert Audi, a UNL philosophy professor, said many of the papers deal with analysis of knowledge and justification of belief in God. The papers will discuss religion, morality and other topics.

The conference, at the Clayton House, 10th and O streets, is intended to advance knowledge in the field and Audi said he hopes it might possibly lead to the publication of the papers. Some paper topics include, "Faith and Evidentialism," "The Problem of Total Devotion" and "Religion and the Queerness of Morality."

Authors, professionals in philosophy from across the country, will present their papers in 80-minute sessions, Audi said. During this time, a commentator will ask the author questions and discuss problems.

Because the papers are so lengthy, they were circulated before the conference, Audi said, and authors will only present the key points of their paper.

Many well-known philosophers from around the country will attend the conference, Audi said. Among those attending are: William Alston, Syracuse University; Jude Dougherty, Catholic University; William Frankena, University of Michigan and Charles Hartshorn, University of Texas. In addition, professional theologian Diogenes Allen from the Princeton Theological Seminary will attend.

The conference is funded by a $10,000 grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities, as well as contributions from universities that are sending participants, Audi said.

In conjunction with the conference, Audi is offering a short seminar for graduate and advanced undergraduate philosophy students.
