A UNL student is among 23 other students nationwide who have been awarded an ITT international fellowship for study abroad during the 1984-85 school year.

Jeanne Burke, a senior English and political science major, will study at Trinity College in Ireland under the ITT award. The exchange program is administered by the Institute of International Education. The program, which began in May 1973, is the largest international program to be sponsored by a private corporation.

ITT award winners may include students in any field.

Frank Podany, a master's degree candidate in political science at UNL, has won the first annual Alumni Graduate Paper Award offered by the political science department.

Podany, who received his undergraduate degree from UNL, won the award with his paper "Anticipatory Defense: A Legal Analysis of the Israeli Raid on the Iraqi Nuclear Reactor of 7 June 1981." Podany first submitted the paper in a political science class taught by UNL professor David Forsythe.

Forsythe said Podany's paper was "remarkably well-researched." He said Podany used materials from Congress and the United Nations Security Council and from the State Department and the British government.

The award, which includes a $50 prize, is a competition for UNL graduate students in political science. This year's competition was judged by the department's graduate committee of professors Louis Picard, Robert Miewald, Randy Newell and Rapheal Zarski.

For UNL students who want to enroll in a class wilderness expedition, two former UNL students have set up a scholarship to help pay fees and tuition for the class. Robert Rayer, a senior natural resources major, won the first scholarship.

The scholarship, available through the NU Foundation, is called the Howard Wieggers Scholarship Award in honor of the UNL forestry professor who spent the last 10 spring semesters leading classes on canoeing and camping trips through southern Ontario, Canada.

The scholarship will be awarded annually, preferably to agriculture honor students or natural resources majors. The scholarship considers academic performance and financial need.

Adults are invited to participate in a spelling bee to benefit the Heritage Room of the Lincoln City libraries. Sponsored by the Nebraska Literary Heritage Association and the Lincoln City Library Foundation, the spelling bee will be May 1 at the Zoo Bar, 136 N. 14th St.

Individuals or contestants sponsored by local businesses or organizations may compete in the spelling bee.

A $25 registration fee will be charged for each contestant and a $2 cover charge will be collected from spectators. For registration information, call Carol J. Connor at 435-2146.

The Lincoln Transportation System will be running a detour on the University Place bus route effective April 16.

Because of construction work on North 48th Street, all University Place buses will travel North 52nd Street between Francis and Huntington streets instead of the regular North 48th Street path. The detour will be in effect for an undetermined length of time.

Summer editors named

Lauri Hopple, Daily Nebraskan editor-in-chief for the 1984 summer edition, has announced her senior editor staff.

Jim Fussell, a graduate news-editorial major in the School of Journalism, will work as news editor. Fussell has worked at the Daily Nebraskan as a reporter for one semester and at the Omaha World-Herald as an assistant circulation supervisor. Fussell also has worked on the Journalist, a publication of the UNL School of Journalism.

Pam Siders will be associate news editor and copy editor. Siders is a senior news-editorial major and now works at the Lincoln Star. Siders also has worked on the Journalist as a reporter, copy editor and senior editor. Siders had a high school internship with the Omaha World-Herald's Youth page. She also had an internship with the Lincoln-Lancaster County Health Department writing health articles.

Bunny audition to end today for new Omaha Playboy club

Playboy International Club is now auditioning bunnies to work at its first Nebraska club, which will open in May. The three-day bunny hunt will conclude today with auditions from noon to 7 p.m. at the club, located at the Omaha Sheraton Inn.

"We expect about 900 girls to audition over the three days," said Jim Fowler of Ellis & Guy Advertising, Inc. Fowler said between 45 and 60 girls would be selected.

Fowler said the Omaha club would be the 14th Playboy Club. Other club locations include New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, and Tokyo, Japan.

The Omaha club will offer members and their guests quality food and beverage service, including lunch and dinner, dancing and live entertainment nightly. Attentive service by the famous Playboy bunnies will be part of the atmosphere.

The club will include a 100-seat bar, a 75-seat living room where lunch and dinner will be served, plus a 200-seat show lounge with a dance floor and show stage.

The club's decor, in mauve and grey with accents of coral and brass, is designed to enhance the enjoyment and comfort of men and women alike, according to a release from Playboy International, Inc.

The club will have a merchandise area at its entrance, where guests can buy new membership keys and a wide selection of personal gifts.

Admittance will be restricted to keyholders, their guests and the hotel guests. A Playboy release said there are 700,000 current keyholders, including 70,000 women. This figure represents an increased appeal the club has for members of the opposite sex, the release said.

DN staff wins trend setter award

The Daily Nebraskan won four major awards, including that of national trend setter, at the 1984 College Newspapers and Business Advertising Managers convention last weekend in Nashville, Tenn.

In presenting the trend setter award, Ed Stamper, a private promotional firm manager, said the Daily Nebraskan staff won for creative and well-rounded market research that marked the true trends of 1984.

Tracy Beavers, Daily Nebraskan ad manager, won an individual award as the top advertising manager of the year, while the "Expressions" supplement won the top special features award and the ad staff won the media marketing award.

"Ten of our 12 ad reps this year were new," Beavers said. "I believe the trend setter award was representative of the teamwork we had to have."

About 75 schools belong to CN-BAM and more than 40 attended the convention. Although the advertising staff has won individual and special section awards before, this was the first year the staff won the trend setter award.
