

Letter to Massengale says bookstore is unsatisfactory

A motion requesting the drafting of a letter to Chancellor Martin Massengale stating the Nebraska Union Board's positions on the University Bookstore relocation/renovation was amended and passed at the board's meeting Tuesday night.

Phil Karsting, operations committee chairman, introduced a motion that called for Daryl Swanson, union director, to express the board's positions to Massengale. But the board rejected that motion in favor of an amendment requesting that Karsting draft the letter so it would reflect the views of the board, and not Swanson's interpretation of the board's positions.

In the letter, the board recognized that the "current bookstore facilities...are unsatisfactory," and a change must be made for the Nebraska unions to continue providing better services to UNL students. The letter also expressed the board's interest in working with the chancellor's office throughout the relocation/renovation process.

The board's positions had to be written out, Karsting said, so people would not misinterpret what the board members thought.

Board President Mary Marcy said she is working with ASUN President Mark Scudder to establish a bookstore board that will supply student input for administrators. Marcy said the six-to-eight member ASUN-appointed board will continue where the original bookstore task force left off by making sure the task force's ideas and the chancellor's relocation decision are enacted.

The board also discussed a letter from Gayle Yamauchi, University Program Council president, that asked the board to look into lowering union food service refreshment prices. The matter was referred to the food service committee for further consideration.
