What? You've got a problem? Just ask our Stan Slander

By Tim McGrath

Dear Stan:
 I am a 21-year-old, female UNL student. I met this man at P.O. Pears and at first glance I knew he was "Mister Right." I'll call him Roger, but that's not his real name. Roger is charming, sensitive and intelligent. From the beginning we were very attracted to one another and we had long conversations confiding all our hopes and dreams, our goals and even our fears.

Stan Slanders

It was scary the way we could relate to one another — it was almost as if we were one person. We come from the same socio-economic and racial background and his genes are practically the best I've ever seen. We finally decided that we should share our lives together. By this time the bar was closing and we went back to my room.

The next morning when I awoke Roger was gone and had not even left a note. It has been two days and I am going out of my mind trying to find him. I'm worried sick — what can I do?

Anxious in Abel

Dear Anxious:
 I think you've been out on the sun-deck too long. Half the people out on the dance floor at P.O. Pears look like they're one person. In the first place, not many people are going to answer to Roger if that isn't their name, but try the personals. Secondly, anyone who has a Mister Rogers fixation needs to see a doctor.

Dear Stan:
 My problem is so embarrassing that I can't even tell my friends about it. It's my brother. You've probably seen him out by the Broyhill Fountain yelling and screaming about fornicators and prognosticators and all that. You see, he used to do all kinds of drugs in high school and now he's a chemistry major and I think he's developed a drug that makes him think he's an evangelist. I can't even bear to go by the union on a nice day for fear he's been experimenting again. And that is nothing to what he puts us through at home — jumping up on the table and hollering "blessed are the cheese makers" and telling us to beat our forks into plowshares.

Last month when it rained he started to rip the siding off the house to build an ark. Maybe the worst thing is the side-effects this drug seems to have. A week ago when he seemed perfectly normal he went out and spent his entire student loan on a down payment for a brand-new white Cadillac. I've been too embarrassed to bring any of my friends home for months. What can we do?

Praying for relief in Piedmont

Dear Relief:
 You need to sit your brother down when he's in one of his calm phases. Get out the family atlas and tell him you know of a nice little South American country called Guyana where people are dying to hear the word of the Lord. Sell the Cadillac for an airline ticket and put him on the plan.

Dear Stan:
 I am a graduating senior at UNL in nutrition. I am so excited because I have finally found a purpose! I've decided to join the Peace Corps and go to Europe to help. The people over there eat such nasty things like bratwurst and kidney pie. Do you know what that kind of food can do to your body?

I hope to teach them all of the diets I've tried while in college. Maybe if I can get them to eat less they can send the extra food to poorer countries. Did you know there is a country right next to Europe that is called Hungry? The people there must be starving.

My question is whether or not you can tell me where the racquet club and Nautilus centers are in Europe. Like, I'm sure they're not even on the maps. How can I stay in shape while I'm helping people?

Dear Unconscious:
 I think your top-siders have finally slipped off the deck of life. However, try the Overseas Opportunity Center for your list.

'Crimes of the Heart' to open Repertory Theatre's 17th season

The Nebraska Repertory Theatre's 17th season opens June 28 with the Pulitzer-Prize winning comedy "Crimes of the Heart."
