UNL restores formal ceremony in summer graduation on trial basis

By Vonn Jones

UNL summer graduates will graduate in style this year.

For the first time in 14 years, UNL will experiment with full-scale commencement exercises in mid-August.

According to John Yost, Assistant to the Chancellor, the ceremony will be like the regular fall and spring semester exercises — complete with caps and gowns and pageantry — but on a smaller scale.

"The decision was made in response to several students and parents to have a more formal commencement," Yost said. "In previous years, students attended an informal ceremony where their names were called and they stood up. I think this year's ceremony will be more personable," he said.

About 800 graduating seniors will walk to the platform and receive their diplomas from the dean of their colleges this summer, the former summer graduation committee chairman, professor Patrice Berger, said. Although the ceremony will not be mandatory, officials expect a good turnout on August 18.

Although he hasn't had any official feedback yet on the new graduation format, there are some who are unhappy with it, Yost said.

Margaret McGovern, a broadcast journalism major with three hours left to complete before she can graduate, is one who is disappointed with the new format. She said she would rather have an informal ceremony to attend at the end of the first session so she can move on to other things.

"I don't know where I'm going to be in August," McGovern said. "I could get a job and have to move and then not be able to attend the ceremony."

McGovern said she was upset she wasn't informed earlier that the full ceremonies were to be implemented. If she had known, she said, she would have taken the three credit hours she needed in the spring semester and graduated in May.

If students cannot attend the August ceremony, they can pick up their diplomas at their convenience in the Administration Building, Yost said.

The Chancellor's office will evaluate this summer's graduation, once completed to determine if the tradition of full summer graduation ceremonies will be restored to UNL in the future.
