Commercial.
 The word strikes fear in the hearts of many of today's musicians. The arbitrary symbol that is "commercial" is often said with a sneer of disrespect and commercial music just as often thrown into a pile in the corner like so many polyester sports jackets.

 But to Corey Hart, "commercial" has a different meaning. New on the American scene, Hart has drawn a tremendous amount of attention to himself this summer with the hit "Sunglasses at Night" off of his debut album, First Offense.

To the 22-year-old Montreal native, "commercial" is tantamount to "recognizable."

 "I'm not writing songs for the four walls," Hart said backstage at Lincoln's Pershing Municipal Auditorium where he was slated to play warm up for pop sensation Rick Springfield, who entertained a near sell out crowd of mostly young girls Saturday night. "I'm writing songs for people to respond to."
