Benefit Life downtown clock chimes for Lincoln shoppers

Downtown Lincoln shoppers who wonder what time it is can listen for the chiming of Lincoln Benefit Life's new addition — a chiming clock. The clocks on the front of the building at 134 S. 13th St. is the first to mark the hour in downtown Lincoln since the 1950s.

Ted Kooser, second vice president in charge of marketing administration, said company officials installed the clock because they wanted to give the building more identity.

"...After all, 13th Street is Lincoln's little Wall Street, with a number of prominent banks and savings and loan institutions along it, as well as our life insurance company," Kooser said. "Having a chiming clock goes right along with this feeling."

Although some people have complained that the chiming disturbs their work, Kooser said the company has received more positive responses. The insurance executive said he has seen people glance at the chiming clock to check their watches.

"It's kind of fun having it around," he said.

A crane was used to lift the 500-pound clock to its perch Aug. 17. Kooser said the clock face measures 8 square feet and plays "Westminster Chimes" every quarter-hour.

"It gives some life to the city," UNL junior Reza Shamsuddin said.

Shamsuddin said he heard the chimes for the first time Monday as he walked near the Lincoln Benefit Life building.

The clock is not the first in downtown Lincoln, but Kooser said the clock is the first of its kind since one was removed from 10th and O streets in the 1950s.
