

Mood lightens . . .

Recapturing the light mood, Kerrey closed by demanding of DeCamp: "Remember, John, who you gonna call?" The senator responded by producing a homemade button that read "Guv-busters."

After Kerrey's departure, the committee settled down to dissect the particulars of the amendment with Beverage. In testimony lasting more than 1½ hours, DeCamp extracted from Beverage an admission that the legality of restricting an outside bank from acquiring other banks until reciprocity is granted could be a point of litigation.

The committee then listened to testimony from a group opposed to the bill, mostly Nebraska bankers. Bonnie Peterson, speaking for the Nebraska Independent Bankers Association, pointed out what she said she felt was a contradiction in the governor's testimony.

"The governor says that LB3, which further deregulates Nebraska banks, will enhance competition," Peterson said. "Yet he also states that the stress presently facing many institutions is due to deregulation."

DeCamp and the committee portended the bill's defeat by joining with the bankers in expounding the bill's faults. The final vote was 0-8 to advance it to the floor and 6-2 to postpone it indefinitely.

UNL building is renamed for father and son

The Nebraska Engineering Center has been renamed the Walter Scott Engineering Building Center and construction of an addition to the building will begin later this semester.

The center at 16th and Vine streets has been renamed to recognize the accomplishments of Walter Scott Sr., a 1923 UNL graduate and former UNL teacher. The renaming also honors the generosity of his son, Walter Scott Jr., said Lyle Young, associate dean of the College of Engineering and Technology. The younger Scott made the gift in honor of his father.

According to the May issue of "University Foundation Reporter," Walter Scott Jr. gave $1 million to the NU Foundation. Young said the money will be used to construct a new two-level building linking the engineering center with Nebraska Hall. The building will help to centralize the engineering college, Young said.

The younger Scott is chairman and chief executive officer of Peter Klewit Sons' Inc. of Omaha.

Larry Jacobsen, manager of architecture at Schemmer Associates Inc. in Omaha, said the working drawings will be completed by October 1, 1984. After receiving bids from contractors, the drawings will be submitted to the NU Board of Regents for approval in November, Jacobsen said. The project will be funded solely by private support.

Jacobsen said construction of the new building probably will begin by December. He said the construction would take about one year to complete.

Young said the new structure will house the office of the UNL department of electrical engineering and that this will complete the first part of a three-part construction project.

The addition also eventually will house a 24-hour per day computer terminal facility, a 500-seat auditorium and the dean's suite, Young said, but funds are not yet available for these improvements.

The final phase of the project will be construction of an auditorium on the south side of the center, Young said.
