

Big Red revenue . . .

Says Cleveland: "It gets to be like a morgue around here, but I think that's because fewer businessmen travel at Christmas. I don't attribute it to football."

As for lost convention business because of packed hotels during football season, Barnes, at the Hilton, says he hasn't had much of a problem.

"We try to schedule conventions during the week or during away games. I don't think we've ever lost business because of football."

Bradley D. Landstrom, manager of Misty III, a restaurant at 6235 Havelock, says his business doubles before and after a home game. Stew Jordal, manager at the Legionnaire Club Inc., 5730 O St., says he serves 1,500 meals on Saturday when the Huskers play at home, up 100 percent from the 750 meal average. Landstrom and Jordal say Christmas banquets and New Year's Eve parties more than compensate for any loss of business because of bowl game exodus.

It would appear that bars and restaurants get a lion's share of the long green from the Big Red crowd. Hotels would have to rank a close third. But even retailers, who claim to lose some money on Husker fever, peddle the red and make the best of it. Adams, at J.C. Penney, says he's a Husker for better or for worse.

"I think Big Red football is good for Lincoln, whether it puts money in my pocket or not. Somewhere down the line, one of these restaurant or bar owners is going to need to buy a new shirt or a pair of pants, right?"

Back at Chesterfields, one of the regulars, a heavy-set man in a red Munsingwear sports shirt, lumbers up to the bar and orders another pitcher.

"How 'bout them Huskers?" he slurs thickly, turning around as the bar crowd erupts into another fit of cheers.

Behind the bar, Fisher just smiles and counts the cash.

NASA plans more shuttle flights

By Richard Cooper
Daily Nebraskan Staff Writer

Space is a big part of the changing world.

That's what John F. Schuessler, director of engineering at McDonnell Douglas Corp. in Houston, said in a speech to the Lincoln Chamber of Commerce Thursday.

Schuessler said that right now the National Aeronautics and Space Administration is planning more flights per year for the space shuttle. Seventeen flights are planned for 1986, with 24 scheduled for the next year.

The space shuttle is not only used for launching satellites. Tests of chemicals that can't be separated on earth were performed on the last space shuttle flight by the first civilian astronaut.

The space shuttle program is not the only NASA project, according to Schuessler. The space station project has just gone into the plan B stage but Schuessler said he doesn't see the station being fully operational until the end of the decade.

Schuessler said space is becoming a very competitive industry. Russia, Japan and even a private company in the United States are planning on building space shuttles.

Schuessler has been involved with the space program since the early 1960s, when he helped design equipment for the Gemini spacecraft environmental control system.

Goodale to give 'saucy' lecture

Tom Goodale, vice chancellor for Student Affairs at the University of Denver, will present "A New Look at the Old Sauce" tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Nebraska Union Centennial Room.

Goodale is a nationally known author, lecturer and consultant on alcohol education. His speech is part of "Do It Sober II," an evening of entertainment and education hosted by the Lincoln Council on Alcoholism and Drugs and Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity.

UNL Panhellenic and Interfraternity Council members will tend an open, non-alcoholic bar beginning at 6:30 p.m. and after Goodale's speech. Comedian Rollin Ray will perform a comedy routine.

SAE Vice President Mike Sophir said the purpose of "Do It Sober II," is to present alternatives to drinking. Goodale is a dynamic speaker who will not "preach" about alcohol use, Sophir said.

"Do It Sober II" is free and is one of several alcohol-related sessions included in UNL Wellness Week today through Thursday.
