everywhere (biff, biff is there one downtown?).

For dorm guys, choosing new clothes can be difficult. Well, don't sweat it. Since you still have all your clothes from high school, why not keep wearing them? (Hey, yeah). Designers caution against wearing letter jackets or conference championship shirts with your name on the back (no, really?).

But other than that, old clothes are the "in" thing, particularly when you don't have any money. If you can buy new clothes, buy enough so you don't have to do laundry very often.

Fashion designers have bad news for dorm women. Insiders say it's best to go ahead and wear the clown walking pants, or you won't look as neat as the sorority girls (giggle).

For nerds, the old taped glasses, white shirts and army boots are out. The fraternity guys are taking over the army boot fashions with their nifty new "train shoes." Anyway, knowledgeable nerds will fall back on that old fashion standard — food-uh.

Nothing denotes your nerdiness more than chili stains all down the front of your shorts, or a newly-spilled coke on your pants. Just try it, if you haven't spilled on yourself already today. Don't be surprised if someone says, "Look at that idiot!"

Regular guys should stick to the basics. Wear T-shirts, jeans and basketball shoes. Be a dud. Nobody will criticize your fashion, or lack of it. Just hang out and be normal.

The basic fashions for football players haven't changed much in the past few years. That will still hold true in the near future, as football helmets, shoulder pads and football pants are still accepted as "in." For the daring player who likes to throw to the wind, playing without a mouthpiece is considered fashionable — unless someone knocks your teeth out.

Intellectuals have long trailed the fashion scene, but signs are they may set an important trend for those who find today's fashion "too new." Long, greasy hair and army jackets have increased in popularity among the intellectual set. Bell-bottoms, headbands and peace signs have shown signs of life. Don't be surprised if a '60s nostalgia wave sweeps the country.

I can see it now. The cast of "Happy Days" will come back with a new show set in the '60s, called "Angry Days." Richie Cunningham will get caught smoking pot in the bathroom by Howard, who then kicks Richie out of the house. He and Fonzie will score some mes-caline and head out for California...
