Setting it Straight

In a story on drunken driving in Wednesday's Daily Nebraskan, mention of the accident involving Creighton University students should have read that a drunken driver crossed the center line in a pickup and hit the van full of students.

Wire Report

National and international news from the Reuter News Report

Study: No U.S. support given to death squads

WASHINGTON — The Senate Intelligence Committee Wednesday reported it found "no evidence" to back up allegations that U.S. intelligence or military officials supported rightwing death squads in strife-torn El Salvador. In a report on a major six-month investigation, the committee said, however, that unidentified Salvadorean military officials and prominent unidentified Salvadoreans supported or engaged in the killings.

In a classified longer version of the report, the committee said U.S. government intelligence agencies had contacts with rightwing groups involved in death squad activities. But, it added, "U.S. government officials did not themselves become involved in extra-legal activities." The death squad phenomenon grew during the 1970s and 1980s, the committee voted, and added that current El Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte has taken steps "in achieving an amelioration of death squad activities and their abuses."

Only three names were mentioned in the 33-page, sanitized version of a longer secret report. These were Roberto d'Aubuisson, a rightwing political leader whom Duarte defeated this June in the presidential election; former Salvadorean military intelligence director Roberto Santivanez; and Col. Nicolas Caranza, the former treasury police chief.

In San Salvador, El Salvador, El Salvador President Jose Napoleon Duarte Wednesday said his offer to negotiate with his guerrilla opponents did not include the possibility of sharing power with them. Duarte's comment came during a visit by Secretary of State George Shultz, who joined president Reagan in giving unqualified support to the Salvadorean leader's call Monday for peace talks with the rebels. The talks should begin next Monday.

"Power cannot be had by blood or by bullets," he said, adding that a share in the Salvadorean government could be obtained only by a vote of the people.

Club owners refuse to shut down

SAN FRANCISCO — Defiant owners of at least six bathhouses and sex clubs frequented by San Francisco's gay community have refused to obey Tuesday's official order to close down, health officials said Wednesday.

The closure of 14 such establishments was announced by City Health Director Mervyn Silverman as part of efforts to curb an alarming spread of the disease AIDS, which mainly afflicts male homosexuals and is believed to be spread by sexual contact. In a strongly-worded statement, Silverman alleged that the establishments "promote and profit from the spread" of the disease by encouraging multiple and unsafe sexual contacts.

The businesses are claiming the city's action is illegal, and lawyers for several gay groups said they were preparing for a prolonged court battle. San Francisco, known as the gay capital of the nation because an estimated 20 percent of the adult population is homosexual, has the highest per capita rate of AIDS in the country. AIDS — Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome — has afflicted more than 6,000 Americans, including 736 San Franciscans. The death rate in the disease, which breaks down the body's ability to fight infection, is about 45 percent.

Reagan expected to sign trade bill

WASHINGTON — President Reagan is expected to sign far-reaching trade legislation that sets the stage for relations between the United States and its trading partners for the foreseeable future, congressional sources said Wednesday. The House approved the legislation, which was changed to accommodate most White House objections Tuesday and the Senate approved it by voice vote late that night. The legislation will be sent to the White House soon.

House and Senate conferees completed negotiations on the legislation last Friday following months of very difficult discussions held as the nation suffered under the worst trade deficit in its history. Imports have hurt a number of American industries and there has been substantial pressure on Congress to take protectionist measures. Reagan, however, made it clear that he might be forced to veto any bill that put up major barriers to imports. Increasing protectionism would invite retaliation by U.S. trading partners, undermining the international trading system.

The bill extends the special program benefitting developing countries called the Generalized System of Preferences for 8 1/2 years. It gives Trade Representative Bill Brock board authority to negotiate a two-way duty-free trade zone with Israel and will allow similar negotiations with other countries if key congressional committees agree. It also calls for steel companies to reinvest and modernize in order to get import relief, and includes provisions for retraining steelworkers for other jobs.

Students vote on suicidal choice

PROVIDENCE, N.J. — Brown University students began voting Wednesday on a demand that the school's health center stock cyanide capsules for those students who would choose suicide in the event of a nuclear war. The voting took place Wednesday and will continue Thursday. The results will be made public on Friday.

A university spokesman said that while the school takes seriously the student's concerns about nuclear war, the referendum is not legally binding and "we have no intention" of stocking the suicide pills, regardless of how the vote goes. About 700 of the Ivy League school's 5,400 students signed a petition asking that the suicide pill issue be put to a referendum.
