

Waiting for The Boss

Joel Sartore/Daily Nebraskan

Thanks to Bruce Springsteen, a tent city has sprouted up around the Nebraska Union as more than 400 fans wait in line day and night to buy concert tickets, which go on sale Sunday morning. Among those waiting were, from left, Karen Muhvic, Lin Smith and Tami Stassen.

Fricke said UNL funding must be restored because it has been depleting so much that the school is "losing a lot of quality."

He proposed restoring UNL funding as a way to restore the quality he feels is diminishing.

Fricke suggested bringing an economic development program to Nebraska. To prove the program successful, the state's tax base would have to be broadened, Fricke said. The only way to do that is to bring people to Nebraska, he said.

"We've also got to get the university involved with local businesses and organizations," he said. Close ties with business and industry would help students get jobs when they graduate.

Fricke said he supports the idea of a single governing body to replace the NU Board of Regents and the state college board of trustees "as long as it doesn't create another layer of bureaucracy..."

"We need to eliminate the duplication of programs we already have."

During Schwartzkopf's criticism of Fricke's knowledge of the issues, the regent asked ASUN President Mark Scudder, who was in attendance if he had approached Fricke about a possible debate between the two candidates. Scudder replied yes, and while looking at Fricke told him "You said the concept of a debate was not in your plans."

Fricke paused and said, "A debate was never planned."

During Schwartzkopf's criticism of Fricke, one member of the audience asked Schwartzkopf why the university has not done anything about the "out-of-state" university computing system.

Schwartzkopf defended himself by saying the regents would consider the issue, but "It has not come to our attention." Audience members commented among themselves that the computer system has been out of date for nearly 16 years.

Fuller and his colleagues, Larry Doerr, director of UNL Campus Ministries, and Vernon Williams from the UNL Counseling Center, through groups like UNL Life/Work and the Counseling Center are trying to get students to think for themselves.

Fuller, who teaches ADAPT classes, attempts to teach students to reason through abstract thought. ADAPT stands for Accent on Developing Abstract Processes of Thought. Other programs still in the planning stages encourage "active learning" where difficult concepts are taught through simple experiments followed by abstracted reasoning which allows the student to apply the concept in other situations.

Says Fuller, "We're teaching students to reason."

There still are five days until the 1998 contest deadline and Fuller remains optimistic that more students will respond before deadline. But whatever the results in the short-term, the long-term problem remains.

Alvin Toffler, 15 years ago, in his book "Future Shock" prophesied: "The illiterates of the year 2000 will not be those who cannot read and write, but those who cannot learn and relearn."

Trials first-ever at UNL

UNL students may get the opportunity to observe the first actual trial cases ever conducted on campus. Chief U.S. District Judge Warren Urbom has scheduled three civil lawsuits for Nov. 19 in the College of Law courtroom.

Dean Harvey Perlman said the purpose of having the trials at UNL is to give students easy access to a jury trial in action.

"It is difficult for students to...break away and take off for an extended period and go downtown and watch a trial," he said.

Perlman said he wouldn't be surprised if the professors teaching trial skills incorporated the trials into their classes.

"Judge Urbom happens to be one of them," he said.

Another purpose for having the trials at UNL is to test out the new courtroom.

"It will be interesting to see whether the courtroom works or not," Perlman said. "You never know whether a certain place will actually do what it's supposed to do until you try to do it."
