ran out of the pocket and fired a pass toward Robbie Minor. Weber, one of a phalanx of Husker defenders around Minor, picked off the pass and returned it to the Iowa State six. Doug DeBose scored on the next play, sliding around the left end of the line untouched.

Hood, who had been shaken up earlier and was still treating a neck injury in the Cyclone locker room shortly after the game, said he didn't see Weber until the defender stepped in front of Minor. He attributed that to Nebraska's ability to change coverages on the Cyclone play-action-pass.

The touchdown came with 7 minutes left in the third quarter. Iowa State, still unable to do anything offensively, stopped two Nebraska possessions before Dave Burke tumbled and recovered a Thompson punt at the Husker 20 yard line.

The teams switched sides for the last quarter, and on the first play, Doug DeBose took a counter sweep back over the middle for an 80-yard touchdown run.

The Cyclones literally imploded then, as Nebraska scored three more touchdowns. Turner's second 1-yard scoring sneak was set up by a leaping interception by Dennis Watkins. Reeves' interception off freshman reserve quarterback Derek DeGenaro set up a 14-yard pass from Craig Sundberg to Brian Hiemer. Nebraska closed out the scoring on a Sundberg lateral to Keith Jones. The play covered 47 yards.

Cyclone coach Jim Criner said he would like to have had two plays — Weber's interception and DeBose's run back. But, he said, it was clear who was the better team.

"There's no question they are a much better defensive team than we are an offensive team," Criner said. "We were in no way as physical as they were up front, and I was very disappointed in that."

Iowa State defensive tackle Barry Moore said the Cyclone defense did all it could before the rash of turnovers settled the game.

"It was kind of frustrating," he said. "We played Oklahoma tough and we played Missouri tough. We thought that if we went into the fourth quarter even, we could win it."

Braswell, who earned national defensive honors for his 19-tackle performance against Oklahoma, said Nebraska's offense finally made its trickery pay off in the final quarter.

"Oklahoma just came off the ball and right at us. It wasn't so hard to tell where they were going. Nebraska would run right at us one play, then do some misdirection stuff the next," he said.

Jowdy leads Husker victory

Ed Jowdy won the 100- and 200-yard breaststroke races to lead Nebraska to a convincing victory in the season's first swimming invitational Saturday in Lawrence, Kan.

The Huskers won the Big Eight Invitational with 739 points. Iowa State was second with 532. The third team, Kansas, had 266 points. The Husker women swam a distant second to Kansas, with
