'The Celebrity Portrait' hangs in UNL museum

By Joel Sartore
Daily Nebraskan Senior Editor

You might not know it, but the Sheldon Art Gallery has one of the finest photography collections in the Midwest.

The proof is just hanging there. For the next few weeks, "The Celebrity Portrait" exhibit will be displayed on the gallery's first floor. Nearly 40 prints from Sheldon's permanent collection depict the work of such photographers as Edward Weston, Yousef Karsh and Arnold Newman, to name a few.

The museum's curator of photography, Anthony Montoya, said there are even more prints available.

"We have 3,000 images in our collection now," Montoya said. Of these prints, a few are taken out periodically and displayed in shows designed by Montoya. A show in December, for example, will deal entirely with an historical theme and include only color works, he said.

Because of the number of quality prints the gallery possesses, different shows can be put on with little repetition. Montoya, who has been curator of photography since July, said much of the collection's credit should go to former curator Norman Geske, whose efforts helped triple the gallery's number of images since 1977.

"He knew to buy when the prices were down," Montoya said. "Many small museums today have been priced right out of the market." For example, the average cost of a vintage print today is between $5,000 and $50,000.

Many photographs also are gathered from private individuals who donate works to the museum in order to get tax write-offs or to simply help out the gallery.

"They say, 'Here's a museum with a viable collection. Let's help to make it better,'" Montoya said. As a result, the Sheldon now has one of the finest collections not only in the area, but in the nation, he said.

A few visual examples of Sheldon's collection are on display in "The Celebrity Portrait," a Sheldon exhibit running until Nov. 25.

'Feeling fit spills over into everyday life' — Jazzercise

By Lisa Nutting
Daily Nebraskan Staff Reporter

"Plie — hold, hold — good. Keep those knees above your toes. You're lookin' good."

Judi Sheppard Missett, creator and president of 'Jazzercise,' directed a 1½ hour workout Saturday at Lincoln's Cornhusker Ballroom. About 350 jazzercisers showed up for the workout.

"It's just amazing, the turnout we've had," Jazzercise area manager, Carol Schmidt, said.

Jazzercise originated in California more than 10 years ago. The program reaches about 400,000 people in all 50 states, plus 15 other countries.

Though Missett is busy juggling her roles as wife, mother, corporate executive, performer and choreographer of Jazzercise routines, she still finds time to teach classes at the Jazzercise Center in Carlsbad, Calif.

"I love teaching and I love performing," Missett said.

In 1972, Missett moved to San Diego with her husband and daughter, where she began the Jazzercise program. The program, she said, is for people who don't plan to be professional dancers yet still enjoy dancing and exercising.

"I turned people away from the mirror," Missett said.

Missett says Jazzercise is like playing follow the leader — the instructor faces the students, who in turn follow the movements.

"I'm not negative at all," she said. "I told students, 'You look good, great.' This isn't intimidating or restrictive."

When Missett began Jazzercise, she said she had no idea that it would work and become so successful.

"There's no master plan." However, she thinks "big." She said she never says "No, I can't do it."

Missett asks for perfection from herself and those she works with.

Missett says she accomplished her goals with sensitivity, fairness and common sense.

"When a person feels fit and is, it spills over into everyday life," she said.

Missett is working on a five-day television pilot, which she thinks will be aired next year.
