

Lincoln bar promotes nightclub image

By Lise Olsen

Daily Nebraskan Staff Reporter

Chesterfield, Bottomsley & Potts, in the basement of the Gunny's building at 13th and Q streets, is changing its image. The bar, previously known for its food and pool, is adding some kind of entertainment every night of the week.

Michael Anderson, entertainment manager, is leading the bar's transformation into a nightclub.

"We're trying to get something established here," Anderson said. "Entertainment in Lincoln needs a little help."

Renovations have already been made to accommodate the new entertainment. The back room of the bar has been expanded into part of the poolroom, nearly doubling the seating and dance floor areas. A stage also has been constructed. Eventually, dividers also will be installed so that the room can be closed off for private parties and for more "big name" bands, Anderson said.

Another change is that those under 20 also will be able to sample Chesterfield's new entertainment. Every other Sunday afternoon, Chesterfield's will offer concerts. The concerts will feature local bands and are open to everyone who wants to hear bar bands in a non-alcoholic atmosphere, Anderson said. This Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m., "4-against," will play at Chesterfields.

In addition to the "Sunday Afternoon Clubs," the bar will offer weekly features. On Mondays, the bar is sponsoring an "All-University Trivia Night." Some questions will be taken from UNL textbooks and professors, Anderson said. The only entry requirement is that the four team members be at least 21 years old.

Tuesdays will be "open stage," where people from the audience are welcome to make fools or stars of themselves.

Thursday night is "tape night." The club will try to emphasize new releases, including some that aren't in Lincoln record stores yet, Anderson said.

Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays, live bands will play at the club.

Chesterfield's venture into the music scene may be an economic risk, Anderson said. However, because of the club's proximity to campus, he said, Chesterfield's has an obligation to students to fill the void in entertainment.

"I know what it's like to sit home and try to think of something to do on Saturday night," he said.

Under construction — Chesterfield, Bottomsley & Potts is renovating its image — more room, more music.

Drumstick hosts Nashville rockers

Tim Krekel and the Sluggers, a new band from Nashville, Tenn., will play tonight at the Drumstick.

Krekel wrote Jason and the Scorchers' "I Can't Help Myself," and played guitar on their last album.

The Pedestrians will open for the Sluggers. Cover is $3.
