

Las Vegas' earthly pleasures seduce student

Humor by John Meissner
Daily Nebraskan Staff Reporter

This is the first in a two part Daily Nebraskan series.

Las Vegas (AP) — A college student, vacationing in Las Vegas for the first time, succumbed to earthly pleasures Sunday. He was 21.

Chris Mason, a civil engineering major at the University of Wisconsin, was discovered by his parents on the outskirts of town, wrapped in a bordello.

Police refused to speculate on the matter, other than acknowledging the embarrassed Mason "smelled of alcohol and prurience."

"I think it's something best left up to the youth's parents," Captain Ty Rickover said, turning in his badge.

Mason's father, Dixon, admitted he was deeply disturbed — "with my son's behavior, that is" — and promised complete reparation.

"Mason will be busy writing letters of apology to everyone who sees this article," he said. "And to his minister. And the people whose job it is to stock cheese in supermarkets. Possibly the 1968 U.S. Equestrian team. We're not taking any chances."

The elder Mason called the bagnio (known to locals as the Hotel Melliferous) a "seething den of inequity (sic)." He blamed himself for his son's demise.

"I knew better than to let him come to this modern day Sodom and Gomorrah," Mason said, endearing himself to thousands of Las Vegas residents. "Chris came out here with one intention — to get corrupted."

Chris' cathouse companion, Cricket LaWells, termed the elder Mason's response "Feckless didacticism, standard currency for wet-blankets and flaccid ultra-conservatives." She stopped short of branding him a malevolent puritan, however.

"That's not my style," she purred. "Besides, he's burned up because he thinks his son failed him, you know?"

LaWells described Chris as "sweet, but terribly scared. He was reluctant to even come inside. He must have walked by the place seven times."

"I think he was afraid of getting caught and of the potential repercussions if someone did find out — especially someone on the 1968 U.S. Equestrian team," she continued. "When his parents barged in not five minutes later — we were still pre-coitalizing, I swear it — it's like Chris freaked out. Something snapped, you know? It was a real bummer."

"Chris screamed, said he couldn't live with the shame. I wish he could have been a little quieter, for the other customers' sakes. It wouldn't surprise me, though, if his father's truculence dooms Chris to life in a mental hospital," she said.

Father Mason scoffed at LaWells' assessment. "Chris will recover, although the ridicule and scorn I subject him to should vex him for a few years. Since when do you give any weight to the moral judgements of a hussy, anyway," he demanded.

"I'm an insurance salesman, and if I handled my clients like she handled hers... Well, never mind."

Wayne Newton, opening for the Beach Boys, was unavailable for comment.

Salvadoran faction leaders to participate in public forum

Representatives from the three warring factions in El Salvador are featured in a public forum, "El Salvador: The Road to Peace," tonight at 10 p.m. on NETV, channel 12 or 13 on your television dial.

The program, produced by Los Angeles public television station KCET and the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions, based in Santa Barbara, Cal., was videotaped Wednesday and will consist of a discussion and debate among leaders of the Salvadoran left, Center and Right. Allen Weinstein, president of the center and former host of the PBS series "Inside Washington," will moderate the forum, which will be conducted in English.

Participants who have committed to appear on the program include representatives of the Right: Raul Molina, Party of National Conciliation, and Fransico Quinones, Popular Salvadoran Party. Representing the Center are Ray Prendes, Ministry of the President, Secretary General, Christian Democratic Party; and Ricardo Gonzales Camacho, Minister of Economics, Democratic Action Party. The Left is represented by Reuben Zamorra and Hector Oqueli, both of the FDR/FMLN.

Program producers hope that Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte will decide to participate in the forum, either in person or via satellite.

The format of the discussion likely will examine the causes of the war in El Salvador, the current state of democracy there and the prospects for peace.

Also participating in the discussions will be an in-studio audience, representing a spectrum of American views on El Salvador, including elected officials, State Department representatives, academics and El Salvadoran exiles now living in southern California.
