UNL fraternity sponsors Drug Awareness Week

By Gene Gentrup Daily Nebraskan Senior Reporter

Phi Delta Theta fraternity and the Lincoln Detoxification Center are co-sponsoring Drug Awareness Week at UNL through Friday.

Noted Lincoln Sex Therapists Carol and Joe Rodgers gave a presentation Monday on "Drugs and Sexuality" and assistant professor of sociology Jay Corzine spoke Tuesday night on "Cocaine and Other Stimulants."

Thursday's seminar will be in the Nebraka Union's Harest Room at 7 p.m. The topic will be "Alcohol Tolerance: Are You a Lightweight or Heavyweight?" Duke Engle, assistant director of the Independence Center, will be the speaker. On Friday, the topic will be, "Intervention — You Can Help a Friend." It also begins at 7 p.m. and will be in the Harvest Room. Otto Schultz, chaplain for the Detoxification Center, will be the featured speaker.

UNL's Phi Delta Theta fraternity is cosponsoring the week as part of the restrictions set for it earlier this year by the UNL Judicial Board. The restrictions followed an investigation of two former Phi Delta Theta members who were arrested

The Food Security Wheat Reserve is part of the Commodity Credit Corporation, the national holding group that has millions of metric tons of wheat in reserve. The security reserve was created in 1981 to decrease the massive wheat surplus caused by the Cartor grain embargo. Under the provision, 300,000 metric tons can be granted annually to countries suffering major disasters.

Ethiopia apparently has solved its transportation problem, an unofficial condition for grain shipment. Amick said that since Soviet-built trucks have been brought in and ports are operating more for delivering cocaine in the summer of 1983.

The fraternity was not surprised, but Mike Carter, president of the fraternity, said the board didn't allow the fraternity to sign new members until membership recruitment begins again next summer. The fraternity also was placed on social probation until the fall of 1985.

He said that because the house was not allowed to "rush," house capacity fell about 30 members short, making it financially impossible to keep the house open. No members currently live at the house, but Carter said with a good rush next year, members could move back in August.

Carter said no restrictions were set by the Interfraternity Council, and charges made at last semester's hearing "have all been cleared up."

Carter said the fraternity has re-evaluated its programs and has set new goals, especially in community service, with its national officers.

"We realize we need to improve our image," Carter said. "We've set, as a goal, about eight community service projects this semester. The Drug Awareness Week is one of them."

smoothly, the wheat should be evenly distributed.

Bereuter said that storing 300,000 metric tons of wheat costs the government about $3.5 million annually and that farm groups would like to see the reserve reduced because it depresses the market. But Amick said that 300,000 metric tons are a very small portion of the total CCC reserves.

"It's not going to be enough to sway the domestic market," he said.

UNL Agricultural Economics professor Lynn Lutgen agreed.

"It wouldn't hurt, though," he said. "It would give a psychological boost."
