Shawn, 7, (left) and Collette, 3, Props, children of Carol Props, marvel over the hand-made finger puppets at the YWCA Holiday Children's Bazaar. The annual bazaar lets children ages 3 to 12 buy the hand-crafted gifts priced from 25 cents to $3 for their families. Each child must have a reservation and is assigned a time to come. The profits go to the Child Development Department of the YWCA and are used for child programs, said Deb Cabela, volunteer. She said the planning starts early in January. In March, volunteers meet every Thursday to begin making the crafts.

Computing...

Those specifics include a computer gift from Control Data Corporation now being installed and computer work stations across campus, if approved by the Legislature.

Leuenberger said because computers go out-of-date quickly, it's hard to set specific, long-range goals. "The goals are difficult to consider because of the extension of academic computing beyond the traditional heavy-users," he said.

Doug Gayle, UNL computing director, said it is important for UNL to determine where computing is going and how the university can catch up with its peer institutions.

"We can't do long-range planning, but on the other hand we need to know where we're going in our computing needs," he said.

When the first phase of the plan was drawn up in 1982, the main goal was to increase the number of computer work stations per student, Gayle said. Since then, the number of terminals has increased 680 percent.

In 1983, UNL acquired more than 400 computer terminals for four computer access programs. Gayle said about 140 of the terminals have been installed and are now being used.

He said more are needed if UNL is to keep pace with its peer institutions.

"We've got to think of where we want to be in the future," he said. "As of now we are in last place among our peer institutions."

Young Farmers learn about Wyoming economy

By Dan Stehlik
Daily Nebraskan Staff Reporter

Go west, young man. Go west! That's exactly what eight members of the UNL Young Farmers and Ranchers Educational Association did as they joined 62 other Nebraskans to attend the 18th Annual Young Farmers Institute in Casper, Wyo., last week. The Wyoming Young Farmers and Ranchers provided a program to portray various lifestyles in the state. Tours of ranches from the southern cattle spreads to the sheep operations farther north showed the state's main agriculture enterprises. The importance of coal and uranium mines, oil wells and wildlife on the state's economy was clear. A sampling of the state's history and examples of the importance of a healthy environment also were included in the tour sites visited. Student Maurie Larsen, who went on the tour, said that while he didn't learn many new ideas he could adapt to his operation at home, he thought he now had a better understanding of the Cowboy State.

Nearly 600 Young Farmer members from 27 states attended the Institute. One of the highlights each year is the Spokesperson for Agriculture Contest sponsored by Elanco. A 5-minute prepared speech followed by a 10-minute question period determines three winners. These people will tell agriculture's story to thousands of urban consumers. Nebraska's Reesa Eisler of Greenwood was picked as one of the three winners. She spoke on agricultural exports and their relationship to economic policies.

The Young Farmers and Ranchers program helps members and consumers become better informed about agriculture and related businesses.
