

'Dune'...

Continued from Page 24

The Harkonnens defeat the Atreides for awhile, wiping out the Duke Atreides and most of his fighting men. But the Duke's son Paul survives, as does his mother, Jessica, who is a Bene Gesserit. They are taken in by Arrakis' native population, the Fremen, who have legends of just such a pair leading them to freedom and to the creation of a new Arrakis — transforming it from a desert planet to a fertile Eden.

Paul (Kyle MacLachlan) is indeed the superbeing the Bene Gesserits dreamed of, and the Messiah. MacLachlan turns in a fair attempt at recreating the charismatic boy-leader of the people — but the Harkonnens steal the show.

Oh, and if you're just going to "Dune" to see Sting, I warn you now: He has a bit part. But he's good at what he does.

'Jewel in the Crown' debuts tonight on ETV

The five years preceding England's granting of independence to India in 1947 have been called the "final years of the forced marriage between the two countries, followed by the agonies of divorce."

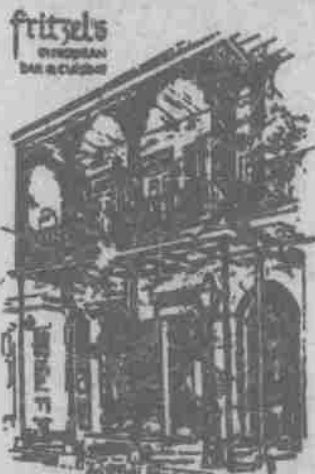

It is in this uneasy setting, when rioting and violence heralded the coming independence, that the British and Indian men and women are embroiled in "The Jewel in the Crown," a 14-part series debuting on Masterpiece Theatre, tonight at 7 p.m. on the Nebraska Educational Television Network.

Masterpiece Theatre is telecast with closed captions for hearing-impaired viewers.

"The Jewel in the Crown," filmed extensively in India with a huge cast of British and Indian actors, is a sweeping dramatization of Paul Scott's four novels known collectively as "The Raj Quartet."
