Wrestler...

At South Sioux City High School, Dawkins took fourth at state as a junior and ranked number one his senior year before the state meet, at which he didn't make weight.

After high school, Dawkins placed second at the Junior Olympic Grand Nationals. He lost only to his twin brother, who now attends UNO, but doesn't wrestle there.

Dawkins didn't like wrestling at Westmar, so he joined the Army, which now helps pay for his schooling, along with a partial wrestling scholarship. He left the Army Aug. 23 and got to Lincoln the day classes started. Now, after more than a semester in the program, Dawkins said he likes it and hopes to win a better scholarship next year.

Dawkins said he followed Nebraska wrestling and wanted to wrestle here since high school.

"The competition in the Big Eight is really tough," Dawkins said. "Before I just really stuck with the same stuff, but to be a good college wrestler you have to learn a lot of new moves, a different style of wrestling. The coaches here have been working with me but I haven't caught on as good as I would have liked to."

Fehrs said Dawkins filled a need in the program when he signed on.

"Although he's not a starter, he's an important factor in our team," Fehrs said. "He's filled in at both 118 and 126 for us and has for the most part done well."

Dawkins' record is now 5-5 after two losses last weekend.

Dawkins said he plans to redshirt next year and get caught up on his studies. Then, he will hopefully have time to devote to wrestling in his final two years of eligibility.

Despite his age, "Right now I feel like I'm just about with the rest of the freshmen," Dawkins said. "I've improved, but I don't feel like I've improved to my capabilities."

Fehrs said Dawkins possesses good strength and a deceptive takedown.

"When you watch him it doesn't appear he should get the takedowns he gets," Fehrs said.

"Where he needs to work on most in terms of improving himself would be to escape from the bottom and to improve on his endurance," Fehrs said.

In spite of Dawkins' maturity, Fehrs said, "It is still a tremendous difference in the caliber of wrestling here as opposed to any wrestling that he's probably been associated with."

"In high school I was way out of shape," Dawkins said. "I was really short and fat. My junior year I started lifting weights and lost a lot of weight. I've been called 'fatso' half my life."
