Deadline for tuition checks is 4 p.m. today

If you've ever wondered exactly what happens to your tuition payment envelope after you put it through the slot in the door, then you're not alone.

Hundreds of students have dropped off tuition checks during the past few days to beat the 4 p.m. deadline today.

What's behind the door? A box that catches the envelopes. When the box gets filled — which doesn't take long as the tuition payment deadline nears — one of five cashiers collects the checks and enters the information into a computer terminal.

Monday morning was slow, according to Jim Wickless, Business and Finance. From the time the office at Administration 204 opened at 8 a.m. until close to lunch time, two of the five cashiers recording the transactions behind "the door" already had done close to 600 entries.

Today is the last day to pay tuition without being charged a $20 late fee.
