"I'm really surprised at how much people don't really know about birth control," said Mary Lou Golon, a health center nurse and teacher of the class. "They've read and heard about it all, but that's about it."

Women make up the majority of the classes, offered twice each week. But, Golon said, more men also should attend.

"It is a two-way street," she said. "Why should the girl be there alone?"

Fleischl said students can attend the class just to find out about birth control.

"They don't need to think they're committing themselves to a sexual situation just by coming to the class," he said.

The health center also offers pregnancy and venereal disease counseling.

Students can find off-campus help, too. Planned Parenthood of Lincoln offers gynecological care and pregnancy testing for women and sexual counseling for both men and women. Planned Parenthood charges a minimal fee for some services, but won't turn people down because they can't pay, said Susan Letheby, community educator for Planned Parenthood.

On campus, the UNL Counseling Center offers confidential sexual counseling. The center, along with the UNL Women's Resource Center, also sponsors sex role discussions, which run through spring break. In the sessions, students can explore and discuss sex roles, the problems people encounter in sex roles and how to cope with a sex role.

Students won't find many sex education classes that they can take for credit. Richard Dienstbier of the psychology department teaches human sexuality, one of the few human sex education courses available at UNL.

The 400- to 800-level class focuses not only on physical details of sex, but also on sexual compatibility, arousal cycles and other psychological aspects of sex. Dienstbier said high school and college courses usually only deal with the physical aspects of sex.

"There aren't that many good sources available for human sexuality," Dienstbier said. "We definitely need some improvement. It's a shame that this class isn't available to other kids."

Letheby of Planned Parenthood said society needs to upgrade its sex education.

"I do think we need some improvement," she said, "but at a lower level, starting with the parents and their preschoolers."

vote of one-third of the entire student body. With the new constitution, it will take two-thirds of students who vote to pass the amendment—rather than one-third of the entire student body.

"It was almost unamendable," Scudder said.

According to Scudder, the revised constitution will give students more power.

"Now the students have more control over the destiny of their own constitution," he said. "This takes control and puts it in the students' hands," he said.

The constitution has not been amended since 1965.

In other business, the regents:

- Voted to buy another parcel of land for the proposed Lied Center. This section of land at 323 N. 13th St. will cost $190,000.

- Decided to sell Terrace Hall at 425 University Terrace. The building's small size and location and "state of disrepair" made it so it could not be used effectively for university programs or as an extension or annex to university housing. A fraternity is considering buying the house.
