ANUS senate eliminates own budget

By Nathan Napper
Staff Reporter

The ANUS Senate voted to eliminate its own operating budget after speaker Nark Noseborn claimed heinous "Greek activities" were occurring.

The ANUS Committee for Feces Allocation recommended a 150 percent increase in ANUS's budget to allow for what he called "new office equipment."

Then Noseborn said that ANUS was not accessible to most students and said "Greek activities" were happening. Noseborn said he "just knew" the Greek activities were occurring because the people he saw in the senate office seemed "well-dressed with short hair." He also hinted that Greeks were not representative of the whole campus.

"I've seen them boys and girls going into the office and they're not normal," he said. "You know what I mean, normal-looking college boys and girls."

Senator Ferd Farquar seconded the motion, because he said "spending money is not the answer to everything."

Other senators agreed. President Lark Scooter said he said the decision was made under "heated conditions."

"We felt that certain appropriations requests had been made excessively and I think in the midst of all that reappropriating and reducing we just got caught up in it and the senate has made a statement that ANUS needs some change and hopefully we'll be working on those changes in upcoming weeks," he said.

In other action, the senate voted to create a shrine to Agamemnon and to create a fund for buying a giant fiberglass football helmet to put on the Mueller Bell Tower.

Halfasskin 'over covered,' members say

By Ned Narcolepsi

The Daily Halfasskin Editorial Board debated the coverage of their coverage of the Nebraska Legislature by other newspapers at this meeting Monday.

budget grinding. She wrote a letter saying she had a painful "orthopedic catastrophe" and was taking some "drugs that make you sleep."

Twenty-two state senators wrote a letter criticizing the Daily Halfasskin for running the photo. It said, in part, "We think what you've done is terrifying. What if the press just went around taking pictures of anybody doing anything at the Legislature? We'd all be embarrassed."

Daily Halfasskin editor in cheese Fish Belch clung to the First Amendment like "a politician in a shit-storm."

"We ran the photo because the forefathers of this great nation would have wanted us to,"

Belch said at the board meeting. "However, we think it's funny the other Nebraska papers ran stories about our photo and never talked to us."

The editorial board decided not to do anything about the situation.

Editorial page editor Chris Surface said he read a letter in the Lincoln Urinal from a man who threatened to catch the editor "sleeping, doodling on his note pad, screwing around with a section editor or scratching his you-know-what."

Belch said he would stay home for a few days. Surface said he saw a suspicious person lurking in the hall with a Pentax and a spiefel.

Asleep at wheel Sorority girls drive to class, experts say

By Bill Dozer
Staff Necrophiliac

Editor's note: This is part one in a five-part series examining the issues surrounding sorority girls who drive to class. These issues include: Campus reaction; physical debilitation, such as ingrown toenails from over-braking; and messy gum on floorboards.

Driving to Class

Just when you thought it was over, the nightmare begins again.

Spawned by warm weather and color-blind fashions, they came out of nowhere, and are going nowhere, except perhaps into the minds of those too lazy to notice.

Of course, the horror I'm talking about is sorority girls who drive to class.

There have been a rash of reports coming in to the paper lately, but we've kept quiet so far cause we were trying to lay low until "Hurricane Swamp" blew by. But we can be still no longer. The accounts that follow will be gruesome. Please be ready to contain any children or small animals that may see this . . .

"Yep, I saw one, and I think my bowels started hurtin' me right about then," said a man who calls himself "Shelly Winters."

"I was sitting on the corner of 16th and R streets, trying to smell my own feet, when I saw her. She came out of the Pie-Pie House and hopped into a Mazda BX-7. Naturally, I chased her around the block to the Memorial Stadium parking lot, where I saw her sit and wait 20 minutes for a spot." Horrible, you bet it is. But that's not all. These same sorority girls are thinking about unionizing.

"Yep, I heard them talking, and all I could do is tilt my head funny, you know, like a dog does when it hears a weird noise," said Fred P. Mertz, a student who said he was giving us his real name out of sheer stupidity. "They said something like, 'Hey Muf, you know, I think we should unionize ourselves on our way to class. You know, like why should we not be getting paid a decent wage for driving cross campus?' 'Gee, I don't know,' said the other one, 'Maybe we should.'"

"What they were saying was unreal," Mertz said. "I think I've lost the will to live."

The Horror, the horror. It's simply unthinkable what could happen should the "sorority girl who drives to class" mentality spread any further. So please, for the sake of mankind and the Lord above, speak out the next time you witness such an atrocity. After all, the life you save could be your own.

Goldbeans enters ANUS protest

By Gene Gentry
Staff Country Singer

Former ANUS Residential candidate Leaven Goldbeans filed a formal protest with the ANUS Filopean committee because of what he called unfair competition from winning candidate Germand Parakeating.

"I heard this man with a paper bag on his head say he knew someone who said Parakeating was not wearing underwear the day of the election," Goldbeans said. "I call that unfair with a capital 'U'."

Goldbeans would not say specifically why going without underwear would give Parakeating and unfair advantage.

"It's like running for office without a tie. The people relate to you," said Parakeating, who confirmed the rumor. "There's no law against it," he said.

Mariene Magdelaine denied anything was happening.

WE SPOOFED!

This is four pages of lies, fiction, fibs and gibberish. This is April Fool's Day and this is your foolish paper. The characters in here are not real. We've changed the names to protect the innocent and all that. Read this and enjoy. It's probably the only relief you'll get until exams are over, suckers!
