Rader starts new position with optimism

By Richard Cooper
 Staff Reporter

Ben Rader wants to bring recognition to the UNL history department.

Rader, the recently appointed chairman of the department, said he thinks he has an excellent teaching staff. He said he especially likes the fact that no professors have left the school in the last two years.

Not all prospects are as bright, however. Some staff positions remain open. And because of recent legislative budget cuts, Rader said he doesn't think the positions will be filled.

Rader tries to avoid getting frustrated over the cuts, but he said they hurt students more than the department.

The cuts hit the mechanical aspect of the department hardest, Rader said. For example, he said, the department is unable to repair the microfilm machines. And these machines are important in the study of old documents and files.

Professors also have been affected by the budget crunch. Rader said some professors deserve raises, but the budget cuts make salary increases impossible.

He said at least eight faculty members received outstanding teaching awards, and staff members have written more than 50 books.

Rader replaced Esther Cope in May. Cope left the job so she could concentrate on teaching.

Before becoming chairman, Rader taught at UNL for 13 years. Rader has written three books and has taught at Oklahoma State University and the University of Montana.
