

Parking 'good as ever'

A daily worry for UNL commuters is finding a parking space. Although it still takes some searching, Lt. John Burke, UNL police parking administrator, said parking is "in as good of shape as it's ever been."

Some students are bothered by the assumption that the police sell more permits than the number of available spaces, but Burke said, there is a reason for the system.

He said staff parking is oversold by about 10 percent because staff members work at different times. More commuter permits also are sold because students have various class schedules.

Residence halls are a different matter, Burke said.

"We have enough spaces to accommodate every space we sell," he said. "It's treated as a garage away from home for that student."

The number of complaints about oversold parking permits declined in the last two years. Burke said he received daily complaints in the past. Now, despite construction limiting available space he said students are using the space better and cooperating more.
