

Campus Recreation director leads busy life

By Doug Carroll
Staff Reporter

Stan Campbell is a busy man. Not only is he the director of campus recreation at UNL, but he also serves as the state vice-president of recreation for the Nebraska Association of Health, Physical Education, Recreation, and Dance as advisor for the campus recreation council and for the club sports council. He is Deputy Umpire and Chief of the Nebraska Softball Association and is a certified softball, football and basketball official, all of which keep him very active.

In addition to this, he is Executive Vice-President of the National Intramural Recreational Sports Association.

Founded in 1950, NIRSA is a non-profit professional organization made up of men and women and is dedicated to the establishment and development of quality recreational sports programs and services.

This organization is comprised of a network of professionals in the recreational sports field throughout the U.S., Canada and other foreign countries.

Campbell is a 1974 graduate from Simpson College in Indianola, Iowa with bachelor's degrees in both Sociology and Physical Education. Campbell is the holder of a master's degree in athletic administration from Western Illinois University in Macomb, Ill.

After receiving his master's degree, Campbell worked at Simpson College for a year as a P.E. instructor, Associate Intramural Director, and assistant cross country coach. He then worked at Western Illinois for three years as Director of club sports, instructor of P.E., and Assistant Intramural Director, before coming to Nebraska in 1979.

Now starting his fourth year as director of campus recreation after serving three years as Intramural Coordinator, Campbell says that he likes working here.

"I enjoy working with the students, they have a lot of high ideals and are fun to work with," Campbell said.

One thing that he doesn't like is the lack of recreational facilities here, but he is working on that problem by pushing for a new, multi-purpose indoor student recreation center. Until such a building can be built though, he said he must concentrate on keeping up and upgrading the facilities that UNL does have.

Last April, Campbell was named Executive Vice President of district five of NIRSA, a job to which he was "very pleased to be elected" and which lasts for two years.

As executive vice president, he attends meetings all over his district, which includes the states of Iowa, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, and Idaho, as well as national meetings. He also works with the state directors of NIRSA in his district to represent them on the national board (Kenda Scheele, UNL's Intramural Coordinator, is now in her second year as state director, succeeding Campbell who held that position for two years before her).

One of Campbell's other duties as executive vice-president is to attend NIRSA's annual national conference, which is held in various locations across the United States and last for five days.

At these conferences there are usually eight or nine sessions going on at a time so that the participants can pick or choose which sessions they want to attend. These sessions cover such topics as intramural sports, recreational facilities, and financing.

The sessions are designed to give each participant some ideas for new programs or ways to upgrade old ones. Campbell also attends regional conferences that basically do the same thing but are more attuned to each region's particular needs and problems.

One thing discussed related to financing was commercial sponsorship for recreational sports. This is the term used to describe the putting up of money or prizes by a company for the running of some recreational activity such as volleyball tournaments. Some people don't like it because they feel that it gives the sponsoring company too much control over their program.

Campbell said he thinks that "as long as sponsorship allows us to run the programs it's OK" and added that the sponsorship can be an added benefit to a program. One problem that could arise is if the company pulls its funding and forces the program to collapse, but this problem is negated as long as the intramural department doesn't "rely too much on sponsorship," Campbell said.

"Maybe it's more important for outside play, such as national championships," Campbell said.

Despite his very busy schedule, which doesn't leave much time for a personal life, Campbell says that he enjoys his involvement.

"I'm not sure what the future will hold," he said. He said he just has to "take it one step at a time and see where I end up."

Wherever it is, it will probably be busy.

Volleyball players gain international experience

By Jim Ballard
Staff Reporter

For two Nebraska volleyball players, this summer was filled with plenty of practices, games and lots of travel.

Karen Dahlgren, a junior from Bertrand, competed in the World University Games in Japan. Her teammate, Kathi DeBoer, was a member of the U.S. Junior National Team that also toured Japan.

Dahlgren, who is the Huskers' team captain, was originally an alternate for the team.

"They had three tryout camps across the nation to choose a team, and then they picked five alternates," she said. "I was originally an alternate, but some of the other players were called up to the national team, so they asked me to play."

The team spent three weeks practicing in Colorado Springs, Colo., before heading to Japan on Aug. 20.

"We weren't expected to do very good over there," Dahlgren said. "Most of the other countries had national teams there, while we only sent a college all-star team. We did really well and ended up fourth in the tournament."

DeBoer, a sophomore from Firth, also had to go through a tryout. She was invited along with 14 other women to train in Colorado. Eventually the team was cut to 12 before it went overseas.

"We lost every game," she said with a laugh. "In China, we played their junior national team and some club teams. They ran really quick offenses and were really good."

While in Japan, DeBoer said that she and her teammates thought they were playing the Japanese junior national team, but found out differently afterwards.

"After we played them we found out that that team was probably going to be their next Olympic team," she said. "We weren't really sure if it was their national team or not. We almost beat them though, because they were so young."

For DeBoer, touring in China was also a big cultural shock.

"They were about 50 years behind in everything," she said. "You couldn't drink the water, and they had some really strange food."

Dahlgren, who returned from her trip in early September, said she is looking forward to the Huskers' volleyball season.

"I'm looking forward to getting back and working with my teammates, and having a good year," she said.
