

Property, bookstore delays construction on Lied Center

By Deb Pederson
Senior Reporter

Two things are delaying construction on the $20 million Lied Center for the Performing Arts: the Knights of Pythias property and construction on the new Nebraska Bookstore, said UNL Business Manager Ray Coffey.

The Knights of Pythias property is the only piece of property on 12th Street between Q and R streets that the University doesn't own, Coffey said.

"The university's legal counsel completed filing for condemnation on that property last week," Coffey said. "The court hearing has been set for early November."

UNL also is waiting for Nebraska Bookstore to finish its new building on 13th and Q streets so the present building can be razed for the Lied Center, he said.

The university has offered to help affected businesses relocate, Coffey said.

The businesses on R Street from 11th to 12th streets will be given at least 30 days notice before they must move, he said.

These businesses lease their property from the university. Their contracts say UNL can claim the property when the lease is up if the university needs it.

Kinko's Copies, 1237 R St., may seem like an exception to this policy, Coffey said. But the difference is that its original location near St. Mark's Episcopal Church, 1309 R St., was going to be used privately, not publicly. The property was part of a land-switch deal with Nebraska Bookstore so the bookstore could relocate south of St. Mark's.

Because of Kinko's lease, the university had to relocate the business at a similar site, Coffey said. Tommy's Game Room and Deli's lease had no renewal clause and was near expiration at that time, so UNL plans to relocate Kinko's at Tommy's original address, 1229 R St., as soon as renovations are complete.

Tommy's moved to 245 N. 13th St. after its lease expired.

Other businesses on the Howell Theater block probably will be moved for landscaping of Lied Center, Coffey said. The businesses include Ted and Wally's, 312 N. 12th St., Lancaster House Printing and Publishing Co., 1200 Q St., Bloom Typewriter, 323 N. 13th St., and Pontillo's Pizzeria, 1246 Q St.

The Lied Center won't compete with Howell Theater and Kimball Hall's academic programs, Coffey said.

"The Lied Center is simply going to allow and permit much greater performances that can be brought in and can be done in a more complete way with the appropriate facilities," he said.

Cauble: Students worsened conflict

Charles Lieurance, a Selleck resident sat in the yard to protest. Lieurance said the officers pulled him up from the ground, called him a "punk," arrested him and pulled him aside.

Cauble said police believe in the right to protest. However, he said, Lieurance made an already bad situation worse.

Although he couldn't excuse what the officers said, Cauble said, he supports what they did. In situations like this one, police must use their own discretion, he said.

Lieurance agreed that he didn't help matters.

"Although I did provoke the incident," he said, "I did not provoke the response."

Glenn Gray, Selleck director, said Lieurance could have protested by filing a complaint in his office.

Ray Korpi, Selleck president, said he waited until the police broke up the group before he entered the dispute. He said he asked the officers to turn their car radios down because they were waking up Selleck residents.

Korpi said Officer Farrin used profanity while telling him to go back inside.

Rother, who still was watching the events, said Korpi picked the "wrong time" to complain. He said the police were being provoked and the profanity was understandable under the circumstances.

"A comment like that should really be overlooked," he said.

Cauble said officers Farrin and Meyer are sorry about their profane language.

"They felt bad about it that night," he said. "They felt worse about it when I talked to them. Now, they feel even worse about it because the other guys are saying, 'Thanks a lot, Buddy.'"

Cauble said Farrin and Meyer made the rest of the police force look bad to the student body.

"Since Thursday," he said, "I have heard of four situations where students have egged on officers about it."

Gray said he hoped some good came out of the meeting Monday night. He said UNL Police are important to him as Selleck director, and that he wants to see police and students re-establish good rapport.

In the future, similar incidents could be avoided if students go through the proper channels when they want something like a camp-out, Gray said. Also, when disturbances arise in the residence halls, hall officials should be contacted before the police, he said.

"We can deal with them," Gray said. "The police shouldn't have been called. They should be left for more important things."

Senate bills explain grading policies

By Jen Deselms
Staff Reporter

The ASUN Senate will vote tonight on two bills that would make grading policies and appeals processes easily accessible to students.

Senate Bill 13 encourages the UNL Faculty Senate to develop a policy to inform students about "requirements, standards, objectives and evaluation procedures" on the course syllabus. The bill also says omitting the information leads students to assume that professors adhere to the grading scale and policy most common at the University.

Engineering Sen. Anita Nichols said the bill will help students know how they will be graded.

Nichols said most teachers in the College of Engineering and Technology grade on a curve. The bill will not set a grading scale, but recommends a policy to let students know the grading scale being used, she said.

Sen. Dan Hofmeister said students have the right to know how they are graded. The ASUN Academic Committee collected syllabi from various UNL colleges and found that many of the syllabi provide very little information on the grading policy, he said. Without faculty senate support, Hofmeister said, "this bill is merely a reminder and not something concrete."

The second bill encourages college deans to place their grading appeals process in their college bulletins. Under the supervision of the college dean, professors should include where the appeals process can be found on the class syllabus.

Hofmeister said many students know that a grading appeals process exists, but don't know how it works.

Nichols said she didn't realize until she became involved with the bills that each college has a different process for appeals.

The bill quotes several NU Board of Regents' bylaws as reasoning for the bills. Regent bylaw 5.1 says "each major administration unit shall publicize and keep current all rules, regulations and policies concerning students, and insure that they are readily available to all students and other interested persons."

Hofmeister said the bill would make the information easier to find. He said it would simplify things for students and help the system run more smoothly.

The committee still is investigating the appeals process and the actual grounds for appeal.

The Educational Learning Center will have a Test Anxiety Workshop on Thursday from 3:30 to 4:20 p.m. in the Nebraska Union. Room will be posted. Call 472-1481 for more information.

Applications for the sixth annual Miss Black UNL and Mr. Black Collegiate pageants are available in the Multi-Cultural Affairs Office in Seaton Hall and at the CAP office, Nebraska Union 200. Entry deadline is Friday.

The UNL Horticulture Club needs a club logo and will pay $50 for a winning entry. Anyone can enter. The design should include the words "UN Horticulture Club" and should be appropriate for enlargement as a T-shirt design or for reduction as a letterhead design. All designs must be in black and white on 8 1/2-by-11 paper, but don't need to be photo-ready. The winning design must be submitted as photo-ready artwork within two weeks of official notification to receive the $50 award. All entries become the sole property of the UNL Horticulture Club. The artist's name and phone number should appear on the back of each entry. The deadline for all entries is Nov. 1 but can be extended if anyone expresses an interest in making a class project of the logo design contest.

Entries should be left with the receptionist at Plant Sciences Building 377 on East Campus, or mailed to: Horticulture Club, 377-L Plant Sciences, Lincoln, 68583.

The Educational Psychology Clinic is offering a pre-statistics workshop beginning Oct. 21. Topics include: review of math skills, calculator uses, introduction to basic topics and dealing with aspects of fear of statistics. For more information, call 472-1152.
