International success designer's goal

"Dress has fallen into a classical image, and anyone trying to break out of that image is deemed extreme," he said. "You need the classical image and a progressive image to create a balanced form of dress. Everyone being too classical creates such a pull on the fashion pendulum that when it swings back, there's going to be a culture shock. It's the same with our technology."

Knutzen said he would eventually like to attend The Fashion Institute of Technology in New York, here he hopes he can gain a national reputation.

International success also is a goal, he said. But does he feel he will ever join the royal ranks of such eminent designers as Chanel, Dior or St. Laurent?

"Yes, because I have strong ideas and I'm serious about what I'm doing," he said. "The old adage 'clothes make the man' may be true, but I'd rather be the man that makes clothes. Why be a follower when one has the ideas and the savior-faire to be a leader?"
