Cameron says quarantine necessary to stymie AIDS

"Our culture is in danger and your life and my life is in danger because our public health officials, the very people that we pay to protect the public health, somehow believe they have a mandate to push gay rights," he said.

Cameron said public health officials are willing to sacrifice the lives of innocent children to make sure gays don't get quarantined.

Male homosexuals, intravenous drug abusers and prostitutes who have the AIDS virus should be quarantined, he said. Lesbians do not seem to be a major public health hazard and do not need to be quarantined, he said. Haitians and hemophiliacs, although in the high-risk group, do not need to be quarantined, he said.

In most cases, Cameron said, he would try to quarantine AIDS victims in their own homes and would be willing to provide social services for those quarantined to stop the spread of AIDS.

"We have a responsibility to fire, charge and imprison those public health officials that have led us down this wrongful path," he said.

Cameron was dropped from the American Psychological Association membership in December 1983 because of an ethics violation. Cameron said he resigned in November of 1982.

Natalie Porter, UNL psychology professor and APA member said the APA bylaws state that once it receives a complaint and begins to investigate, resignations will not be accepted until the investigation is finished. Porter was one of six psychologists who filed complaints about Cameron with the APA. Porter said the APA received the complaint in February 1982.

Terry Cannon, national chairman of Young Americans for Freedom — the group that sponsored Cameron's speech — said the group knew Cameron would draw a lot of interest and that he represented a point of view that is not often heard.

"The gay community is doing a lot with AIDS contrary to what he (Cameron) said," said Rodney Bell, secretary of the Gay/Lesbian Student Association. Bell said a statewide hotline with AIDS information is being set up with the Nebraska AIDS Project.
