

ASUN phone banks allow students to call home, urge support for NU

Students used the ASUN phone banks in the Nebraska and East unions steadily all day Tuesday, an ASUN official said.

Lynn Didonato, executive board member, said the phone calls to parents show students care about NU's future.

ASUN provided six telephones — four in the Nebraska Union main lounge and two in the East Union North 40 lounge — so students could make free two-minute in-state calls to their parents, urging them to contact state senators about proposed NU budget cuts, she said.

"We want parents to express that 'we sent our children here for an education, and we don't want it taken away,'" Didonato said.

vantage of the free phone calls to talk to his parents and his high school guidance counselor.

"I told my parents their pocketbook was going to get a little strained, too, if the budget cuts went through," he said.

Didonato said the ASUN phones will be available for use from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. today and 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Thursday.

Police Report

● UNL police arrested a UNL student in connection with a disturbance that occurred Oct. 31. The disturbance began on the south side of Burnett Hall when the man allegedly grabbed a woman and began yelling at her. Police contacted the man later in the evening and asked him to leave the woman alone. He allegedly continued to harass her. The man was arrested for third-degree assault, disturbing the peace and resisting arrest. Arraignment is Nov. 20 in Lancaster County Court.

● Indecent exposure was reported to UNL police Monday. The incident allegedly occurred Sunday around 4 p.m. in the fifth-floor stacks of Love Library. The man involved is believed to be the same person involved in an indecent exposure reported between 2 and 3 p.m. Sunday. The person was described as a white, blond-haired male in his mid-20s.

● Police received reports of an attempted burglary at the Nebraska Center for Continuing Education, 33rd and Holdrege streets, and a two-car accident in the parking meters near 14th and R streets.
