

Lied work closes parking lots

Two UNL faculty parking lots have been closed for construction of the Lied Center for Performing Arts.

UNL Business Manager Ray Coffey said the lots, one at the corner of 12th and Q streets, the other west of the University Publishing Co. building, 1126 Q St., have been closed because of building demolitions and construction of Lied Center.

The two lots contained 43 spaces. He said the area west of University Publishing Co. was a vacant lot meant to be used only until construction of the Lied Center began. More parking spaces will be available after this semester, Coffey said. The removal of a filling station building at 10th and R streets has almost made up for the spaces lost to the Lied Center.

An additional 20 to 25 spaces could be added after a contractor completes the renovation of Architectural Hall and moves equipment from 10th and R streets near Westbrook Music Building, he said.

Faculty parking has always been a problem, especially on the south side of campus, he said. Faculty members must accept that they may have to walk farther from their parking spaces to their offices.

Lt. John Burke, UNL parking administrator, said parking problems could be avoided if people used a carpool or took the bus to work.

Coffey said current parking may not be convenient, but the cost would be higher at parking garages. The university looks into building parking garages periodically, Coffey said, but they are too expensive.

Irene Gosner of Lincoln watches the ceremonial demolition of the University Publishing Co. building, 1126 Q St., Jan. 6. Demolition will make way for the Lied Center.

Lied demolition work will begin this month

Demolition of buildings that stand on the Lied Center for Performing Arts construction site should begin in two to three weeks, said Bob Carpenter, university architect for the center.

All buildings between 11th and 12th and Q and R streets, with the exception of Kimball Recital Hall, will be demolished by June 1, Carpenter said.

The demolition, which will be carried out by Debs Demolition contractor of Perry, Iowa, will cost about $125,000, Carpenter said. The University Publishing Co. building at 1126 Q St. will be demolished first. Eight buildings will be razed.

Demolition work will not interfere with traffic, Carpenter said.

A ceremonial demolition kicked off the work Jan. 6. The actual razing of the buildings will begin after preparations, such as disconnection of electrical wires and removal of asbestos from the buildings, are completed.

The Lied Center will cost $20 million to build, with $10 million supplied by the Lied Foundation Trust of Las Vegas in honor of the late Omaha businessman Ernst Lied. Lied was an alumnus of UNL.

The Legislature appropriated $5 million for the effort. The NU Foundation has agreed to raise the remaining $5 million and an additional $5 million for the center's permanent maintenance.
