Bursar set for tuition flood

Tuition payments — due today — have trickled in slowly even though second semester tuition statements were mailed two days earlier than last year, said the director of the Office of Student Accounts.

Bob Clark said traffic has been light at the Bursar's Window, where tuition is due at 4 p.m., but it probably won't last.

"I'm fearful . . . we're going to be swamped," Clark said.

Students who turn in their payments to the Bursar's Office after 4 p.m. will have to pay a $20 late charge. The $20 fine and tuition must be paid by 4 p.m. Feb. 19 or UNL will take further action against the delinquent accounts.

According to the UNL schedule of classes, actions may include "registration cancellation" and "assignment to a professional collection agency."

Although cancellation rarely occurs, Clark said, it does happen, "making a no-win situation for all — teachers, students and the university."

"I'll be happy when this week is over," he said. The $20 fee, which generated nearly $90,000 last year, will be put into the university's general income fund. The fund mainly supports the university budget, Clark said. Student accounts uses none of the fee assessments it receives, he said.

"The $20 fine is a royal pain," Clark said, "but (is) necessary for us and the student."

To avoid the fine and the "usual long lines," Clark suggested students plan ahead if tuition adjustments need to be made. He recommended students use the Bursar payment slot in Administration Building 203 "for quick payment."

Tuition assessment questions can be answered at the Office of Student Accounts, south window of the Bursar's Office, Administration Building 204.
