

'Sharks and Dancer' opens at UNL theater

"Ben's a lonely guy, partially by choice. He's really open and caring, yet alone — until Tracy," he said.

Tracy is played by Jeanne Lee, a second year master of fine arts student. Tracy is Lee's thesis role for her degree.

"I thought Tracy was so different than I am because she appears very aggressive and brash, but that is actually a cover for her vulnerability," she said.

Both Lee and Sterchi found their roles challenging because of conflicts with their own personalities.

"Everyone deals with problems differently and I tend to pull back from them rather than push back like Tracy would," Lee said.

In contrast, Sterchi said his character just sits there and takes a lot of abuse.

"I find that really hard to deal with," he said.

The intriguing part of the play is the incredible need the two characters have for each other, Lee said.

"I don't know if it was a case of Ben needing Tracy and Tracy needing Ben, as much as it was a case of two people simply finding someone, anyone, at the right time," Sterchi said.

Grund said she hopes the audience will find the play humorous and touching, because it deals with situations that a majority of people will be able to relate to.

"Seascape with Sharks and Dancer" contains controversial subject matter and strong language and is recommended for mature audiences.

Performances will begin at 8 p.m. on Feb. 13, 14, 15, and 17 through 22 in the University's Studio Theatre.

Tickets are on sale weekdays from noon to 5 p.m. at the theater box office, Temple Building, 12th and R streets.
