Cuts: possible bylaw violation

By Kent Endacott
Senior Reporter

Students and faculty members told the ASUN Academic Committee Sunday that they have not been notified of proposed budget cuts — an apparent violation of an NU bylaw.

"According to a bylaw, all persons have to be notified of proposed budget cuts, and it came out in testimony that this has not been the case," said Eric Lane, Academic Planning committee member. "When I asked Vice Chancellor (Robert) Furgason before how many students have been notified, he told me, 'No, there was no format to do that.' "

NU bylaw 1.9.8.2. section F states that "before a change or elimination of a program is recommended, all persons connected to, or affected by, the program have an opportunity shall have access to all relevant data."

Louis Des Rosiers, a senior construction management major, testified that student and faculty members in the department of construction management had not been notified of a proposal that would transfer the department into the College of Architecture.

Lane said the vice chancellor's office has been negligent in its obligation to inform students and faculty members.

Students from the Department of Interior Design, the Department of Construction Management and students opposed demolition of the Men's Physical Education building testified before the Academic Committee chairman Dan Hofmeister and ASUN president Gerard Keating will report student and faculty testimony to the Academic Planning Committee Wednesday.

Eric Barton, a junior construction management major, testified that moving the construction management program from the College of Engineering to the College of Architecture would make it more difficult for construction management students to find jobs after graduation.

Students to vote on refundable fees to support DN, NSSA, other groups

By Jen Deselms
Staff Reporter

Students will decide on March 12 if student fees can be used to support the Daily Nebraskan, the Nebraska State Student Association, UPC's speaker program and ASUN executive salaries.

Four questions at the bottom of the ASUN election ballot ask if students approve Fund A fees for each item.

Fund A fees are used to support student organizations and are refundable. If students disapprove the funding of any of these organizations, the money for the organization will not be collected.

The questions about Fund A fees are binding, so student votes make a difference, said Marlene Beyke, ASUN director of development.

ASUN executives have not received salaries since the 1982-83 school year because of voting results, Beyke said. She said all other organizations have received student fees since voting began in 1981. The voting began after the NU Board of Regents passed the Fund A Student Fees policy in May 1980.

Last year 2,228 students voted to continue student fees for the Daily Nebraskan and 764 voted against. ASUN executive salaries were voted down 2,071 to 898. UPC's speaker program passed 1,805 to 1,208 and NSSA 1,850 to 1,090. All of the 3,258 students voting in the election did not vote on the Fund A part of the ballot, Beyke said.

This year the Daily Nebraskan is asking for 94 cents per student, ASUN wants 6 cents for salaries, UPC wants 45 cents and NSSA wants 50 cents.

Last year the DN collected $39,183 in student fees, NSSA $20,750 and UPC $18,744.

Beyke said the money for salaries is always added into ASUN's budget, but if students vote to withhold their fees, the money isn't collected. If the students approve ASUN executive salaries this year, Beyke said, $998 would be paid to each vice president during their term. Each summer executive would get paid $450. ASUN presidents are not paid because they serve as student regent.

There is also a student survey on the ballot, which asks for student opinion on the use of Fund B non-refundable fees. Fund B fees cover debt service, University Health Center, the Unions and recreation programs and facilities.

The survey asks if students support the $94.16 divided among the programs. This is only a survey to get student opinion, but support for the funds has been overwhelming, Beyke said.

Women's role in history is focus of week's events

By Merry Hayes
Staff Reporter

Although people aren't as ignorant about women's history as they used to be, there are still some "gaps," said Ann Kleimola, UNL professor of women's history.

To inform people about women and their accomplishments, the Nebraska Coalition for Women is sponsoring Women's History Week this week.

Some of the activities include:

Today —
Noon film "The American Woman: Portraits in Courage," will be shown at the Nebraska State Historical Society.

5:30-7 p.m. A Professional Women Artists of Lincoln show and reception will be held at the State Office Building.

Wednesday—
Noon film, "The Life and Times of Rosie the Riveter," will be shown at the Nebraska State Historical Society.

7-9 p.m. Readings by women poets will be given at the Bennett Martin Library, 14th and N streets.

Friday—
Noon film, "She's Nobody's Baby," will be shown at the Nebraska State Historical Society.

Saturday—
1 p.m. KZUM will air "The Family of Women: Stories from a World Gathering, Nairobi, Kenya."

Sunday—
The play, "A Voice of My Own," will be shown at the Sheldon Film Theatre. Cost is $2.

The play will be followed by a discussion of women authors' impact on history. English Professor Barbara DiBernard will lead the discussion.

So?! Party platform is to expand on 'existing apathy'

By James M. Lillis
Staff Reporter

The So?! Party officially announced its candidacy in the ASUN elections Wednesday at Tommy's Game Room downtown.

"We believe, in citing the history of past ASUN elections, that most UNL students are as unimpressed as we are with the elections," said the party's presidential candidate Mark Janda, a senior philosophy major. Joe Lutes, a junior political science major and Karl Vogel, a senior journalism major are first- and second-vice presidential candidates, respectively.

The party, formerly the Apathy Party, also has an entire ASUN Senate running with representatives from each college and some representing non-existent colleges.

"We are presenting the student body with a group to identify with — if they feel like it," Janda said.

"We are not calling on the unimpressed majority to get out and vote," Lutes said. "Rather, we would like to acknowledge the grass-roots support of the majority."

"Realizing that at least 80 percent of the student body won't be voting, and thus showing their support for So?!, we would like to declare ourselves the winner by claiming the votes of all who didn't (vote)," Vogel said.

After seeing the ASUN ballot, Vogel said he thinks many candidates for the Senate don't know what they are being voted in for. With this in mind, he said, his party organized an entire ASUN replacement senate to continue and expand on "existing apathy."

If elected, So?! candidates said they would attend all ASUN Senate meetings and sit in their offices to hear suggestions. Unless, of course, they are playing cards, drinking, watching TV, or are strung out in an attic on 26th Street, they said.

The ASUN election will be March 12.
