

Monday

Weather:

Cloudy and showers today, tonight and Tuesday. Increasing southerly winds all day today with a high of 54. A low of 37 tonight and cooler with a high of 49 Tuesday.

The Fall: A band that lives up to its name

Arts and Entertainment, page 13

Free throws hurt NU in season-ending loss

Sports, page 10

Daily Nebraskan

March 17, 1986

University of Nebraska-Lincoln

Vol. 85 No. 123

Mark Davis/Daily Nebraskan

Moe goes

NU basketball coach Moe Iba bows his head earlier in the season in a loss to Kansas. Iba resigned following the Huskers' 67-59 loss to Western Kentucky at the NCAA Tournament in Charlotte, North Carolina. See related stories, page 10.

Sex acts alleged in library

By Jonathan Taylor
Senior Reporter

Early last week, Interim Dean of Libraries, Kent Hendrickson, received an anonymous letter saying that homosexuals reach under restroom stall dividers and have sexual relations in the Love Library South third-floor men's restroom.

The letter, which also was sent to the Daily Nebraskan, was written by someone who admitted that he had participated in such activities.

Hendrickson, who has been interim dean since the summer, said he plans to investigate the problem. But he does not know what actions would be taken to curb sexual misconduct in Love Library restrooms.

Although the library has received complaints of sexual misbehavior in the past, Hendrickson said, the letter is the first recent complaint he has received.

"It's a difficult problem to detect and monitor," he said.

A recommendation made by the letter writer to extend the stall dividers to the floor, "is not workable, because of the library's limited budget," Hendrickson said.

An associate university librarian at the University of Arizona before he came to UNL, Hendrickson said he investigated similar complaints of sexual misconduct and tried a number of approaches to resolve the problem.

Taking doors off of stalls is one solution that has been tried at UNL, but Hendrickson said he disapproves of that practice. Door removal "is not acceptable to the library's patrons in general," he said.

Hendrickson said that improving the lighting in the library restrooms may discourage sexual misconduct, but that is just one of several other alternatives to door removal.

At this point, Hendrickson said, no evidence of sexual misbehavior exists.

Rodney Bell, president of UNL's Gay/Lesbian Student Association, said sexual misconduct in restrooms "is not the type of thing that will ever stop."

According to the letter, gay people meet in the first floor restroom, then move to the third floor restroom, which fewer people use. In the initial meeting, a person sits in a stall and checks the sexual orientation of the person in the adjacent stall by bobbing his foot up and down, the letter writer said.

"The other (occupant) . . . will then do the same, signifying that he is a homosexual and is willing to participate in some activity," according to the letter.

People then will physically contact one another by reaching under the stall divider "and may take turns kneeling under the stall division to have visual and/or touch stimulation which often leads to oral sex," the letter says.

See BRYAN on 3

See SEX on 6

What would Bryan say?

Admirers of politician oppose

By Janis Lovitt
Staff Reporter

Most Nebraskans have at least heard of him. His name would be hard to miss in Nebraska history books.

He was "The Great Commoner," the "Boy Orator of the Platte." His voice rang out across the nation as he plugged for free silver in his "Cross of Gold" speech in the late 1890s. He represented Nebraska in the presidential elections, not just once, but three times.

Later in his life, this politician boarded the platform at chautauquas in the Midwest to preach against the evils of alcohol.

William Jennings Bryan was the most famous Nebraskan politician in history.

It doesn't seem unusual that some Nebraskans plan to honor the memory of this great man by naming a restaurant after him. But there's a catch that is bringing more attention to the restaurant's name than was anticipated.

The catch is that the menu will include alcoholic spirits of every kind. And to top it off, the restaurant will be called "Billy Bryan's," a name that some say is in bad taste.

The corporation, which is made up of Jack Merritt, Doug Ruben and Ray Lineweber, plans to open the restaurant in May at 1301 H St. But opposition from concerned individuals and groups across the state may change those plans.

The wave of opposition seems to be led by a Woman's Christian Temperance Union member, Helen Patzel.

Patzel said she started her crusade against Billy Bryan's because she thinks the idea is disrespectful.

"It's not a very respectful way to honor somebody," she said. "Bryan was the greatest prohibitionist that our country, if not the world, has known. He would be outraged if he knew about it."

When Patzel heard about the restaurant, she immediately wrote letters of opposition to the Lincoln City Council, Mayor Roland Luedtke and the city's liquor commission, she said.

Patzel said she wants the name of the restaurant changed. If the corporation refuses to change the name, then she wants the City Council to refuse them a liquor license, she said.

Although Bryan has been considered a darling of the WCTU since he spoke at the group's convention against alcohol in the early 1900s, other groups have been joining the bandwagon against Billy Bryan's.

UNL students will continue to march for peace

By Dorothy Pritchard
Special to the Daily Nebraskan

Despite the bankruptcy of the anti-nuclear arms organization, PRO-Peace, three UNL students will continue their peace march across the United States.

Sheila Stratton, Lori Shields and Kris Haygeman have decided to continue their peace march along with about 500 other marchers who have regrouped and are no longer officially associated with PRO-Peace. PRO-

Peace officially went into bankruptcy Friday, 14 days and 120 miles into the 3,235-mile march.

"PRO-Peace is bankrupt," Stratton said. "They're $300,000 in debt. We're no longer an organization, but a grassroots group, We're now just 'The Great Peace March.'"

Stratton said the marcher's spirits were good, despite mass repossession of the semi-trucks that housed the marchers' shower, mail and kitchen facilities.

"One day they just said, 'fill your canteens, they're coming for the water truck,'" Stratton said, "We probably only have enough food for a couple more days, but donations are coming from everywhere. People are saying to

See PRO-PEACE on 3