Local music not all meaningless

Okay, punk is dead. Fine. I would rather not have punk and have people playing music that they like to play, like to listen to, and have fun playing.

I play bass for a band, Peer Puppet. We play what we want to play and we don't sing, "Oh, Reagan sucks, Blah" or "You look good baby, let's have sex." We sing about what we care about and what makes us mad. Punk may be dead, I don't care, but Peer Puppet and U.S.M.C. are quite alive, just to name two. We are not meaningless and we are real.

Hey, Terry Pieper, never a punk scene in Lincoln? Haven't you heard of Baby Hotline, Rapid Vapid, Cartoon Pupils, Spastic Apes, Trendy Catholics, and Wabofi? I could go on. Were the Spastic Apes imitating by using a violin instead of a guitar? And who the hell was Wabofi imitating? Do you need a map? The guys in Power of the Spoken Word weren't making a scene by putting on shows at least once every other week?

And Tom Phiegarn, you consider my music dreamlandish? And you consider a band that wore make-up real? Tom, stay away from my music and talk about what you know about, pop rock, kiddie metal. If you cited Motorhead or Metalica it would be a whole different story.

And to Stew: I'm afraid you are right. Slam dancing was once fun but now the big jocko types think it's a survival of the biggest punchout. At least we can say we had fun when it was fun. Right, Stew? But hey, sometimes they aren't there and we all have a good time.

Finnster apologizes for being apolitical

With regard to Stew Magnuson's "wally column," (Daily Nebraskan, March 17), our apologies to those of you who keep trying to find a deep hidden message. We play songs, we like playing songs and we make enough money by having fun to pay for tuition. And you to go listen to that's all.

Again, we are sorry that we don't hold a particular political view, but if that's what you want to hear, there are plenty of good bands around town for
