'April Fool's' follows blood, guts formula' worth seeing only at the matinee price

By Bill Allen
Senior Editor

The people who made the new movie "April Fool's Day" (now playing at the Plaza 4) should be commended for their entirely new approach to the Hollywood "blood and guts" thriller.

Let's see, they hang one guy, they speared one guy through the crotch, they set a booby trap in the woods for one guy, they threw a girl down a well and they left you to guess about what happened to the other corpses that eventually turned up.

Then, when an explanation is most needed — when you're on the edge of your seat wondering why all this killing is going on — you find out about the psychotic twin sister who already has killed her sister and has pretended to be her all the time.

So at this point you have an evil twin sister and two innocent coeds alone in a big house on a desert island.

Naturally, in an incredible plot twist, the two kids who are left get separated. Wouldn't you want to be alone if there was a psychotic twin sister with a large kitchen knife after you?

Then, just as that large kitchen knife is poised over the head of the screaming, gorgeous blonde, the psychotic twin sister's demonic eyes glaring into hers and yours, we are all suddenly reminded why this movie is called "April Fool's Day."

But I can't tell you.

I also can't tell you who starred in this film, because I didn't bother to write the names down. After being in this film I doubt that any of these people will go on to future stardom.

I'll forget the sarcasm long enough to say you've all seen movies like this one "Friday the 13th I, II, III, IV and V," "Jaws," "Halloween," "Happy Birthday To You" — some one just rewrote these using April Fool's Day theme.

Still, I had seen all the other films in town, and having nothing better to do on a lazy Saturday afternoon, it was lonely entertainment.

"April Fool's Day" is a fun movie to go to if you want to make fun of these types of movies in your mind as you watch it. The acting isn't great, the movie deserves the R rating for language and violence, but all in all the characters and "surprise" ending make it worth the matinee price.

Movie Review

No formula here. The thing is fresh!

First of all, take eight or nine college coeds and put them on a deserted island with no way off until Monday morning. Then of course, offer a couple of gratuitous sex sessions that are more of a tease for horny 14-year-olds than they are any kind of character-building emotional scenes.

Then, in a piece of ingenious plot writing, start killing these college kids off one at a time until there are only three left!
