Professor selected for design award

George Tuck, UNL professor of journalism, has been selected to participate in a newspaper design and graphics seminar, June 8 through 14 in St. Petersburg, Fla.

The Poynter Institute for Media Studies Institute fellowships, which honor top teachers in graphics and newspaper design techniques, were awarded to 13 professors in the U.S.

"They polled the country and picked the best graphics people (for the award)" said R. Neale Coppe, dean of the College of Journalism. "It's a nice honor for George. He wanted very much to go."

Tuck said he was excited about the chance to swap information with other top graphics professors.

"It's a chance to find out what you're teaching should be taught," he said. "It will give me a chance to talk to other professors, share ideas and pick up current research (in the graphics field)."

"Judges were impressed by the quality of applicants in all our fellowship programs this year," said Dr. Mario Garcia, director of the institute's graphics and design center.

Coppe said the people picked for the fellowships were the top of the field. The information Tuck could bring back to UNL would advance the college, he said.

The institute selects college professors of graphics and design, to journalism instructors who act as advisers at junior or community colleges, and to college seniors interested in careers as newspaper designers.
