

Some helpful hints for the new kids

Be you short, tall, fat, skinny, city, country, rich, poor, cute, ugly, sick or healthy, you are still all, undeniably, stupid freshmen.

This is a big week for you, so buckle up, attend all those little classes, and stay out of my way. I'm sorry if I'm being condescending (that means being talked down to), but it's just that you people can't walk, ride a bike or drive a car, and some of you are still learning that crazy Social Security number. But as I think about it, within just one short year, you will have conquered the campus, dominated the dorm, and vitalized your virginity. Yes, you will have arrived.

One thing the frosh do have in their corner is an unbiased opinion:

"Yeah, that freshmen article, did you read that? Boy, did that suck!"

"That Anton guy, what a cheese-weenie."

Well, don't be so hard on yourselves, be proud that you've been accepted into this university, this blessed institution of greater knowledge, this resource for the few, this opportunistic vehicle for higher education, this, this... ah geez, there are kids in Jarabub who have never even seen a Husker game.

Craig Anton

Sure there are some of you that have chosen to live that razor's-edge lifestyle among the brotherhood or sisterhood of Alpha-Beta-Sigma-Septa-Rappa-Pajama-Lamma-Damma-Ding-Dong. Sure, you'll have a fun time attending functions and meeting people of the same financial background, not to mention that living hell called "hazing." You thought that only happened in the movies.

Hooray for those that decided not to rush or pledge or donate blood! Hooray for those that have already skipped classes! Hooray for those that have smoked major doobage, done lethal amounts of cheap beer, ordered Domino's after 1 a.m. and then vomited on your roommate's book bag! Hooray for those that have the mentality of peat moss and now serve food! Hooray for all you virgins! Hooray for all you non-virgins! And hooray for all of you nymphomaniacs that will need rides home from my whacky parties.

Good luck to all you freshmen athletes. Be very careful, watch your health and listen to the coaches. They do look out for your best interests, just ask Brian Washington.

And, hey, what about you sophomores, juniors, seniors and grad students? Well, have some fun this week with the young frosh. Give them a spot quiz on campus: "Where is the Animal Research Facility and how long would it take to get there if a train is traveling from New York at 60 mph?"

Finally, here are a few tips for you freshmen: Don't use the revolving doors at the Union, use the side or the R Street entrances. Don't rush it, take your time, work up to the revolving door, watch some of the other students, get the rhythm of the door and then be sure to give the traditional voice signal, "Debra Winger!" People will then acknowledge you and step to the side.

Gags you can play as freshmen: Put a disgusting book into your study partner's book bag while in Love Library; make sure he doesn't see you, though! Put shaving cream on the earpiece of your phone, then sneak down the hall and call your roommate. Start a food fight at home over Thanksgiving. Get your SA pregnant or, better yet, get your SA's girlfriend pregnant — this one is always funny.

I could go on and on, but there are some things that you just have to learn by yourself. Don't forget Mom and Dad, though. Make 'em happy and proud, and always ask them for large amounts of money. Don't forget to wear clean underwear, brush those little teeth after meals, and be courteous to those around you — flush when you're done.
