NU volleyball team in tournament

After being upset in their season opener against UNO, the Nebraska volleyball team defeated Wichita State to get back on track heading into the Oregon Invitational set for this weekend.

"We have our confidence back going into Oregon," he said. "The level of competition there will be better."

In addition to the host Ducks, San Diego State and Rhode Island will also beat the round-robin tournament.

"San Diego is a top ten team, Rhode Island went to the NCAA championships and Oregon has talent, too," Pettit said in sizing up the competition.

Oregon coach Gerald Gregory agreed.

"We have two ranked teams in San Diego State and Nebraska, and Oregon and Rhode Island are two up-and-coming teams who have been there in the past and hope to get back to that point in the future," Gregory said. "It's an excellent field. There won't be any easy matches. We're looking forward to treating the people of Eugene with some top quality volleyball."

The tournament schedule has Nebraska and San Diego State squaring off on Saturday.

"Based on the seeds, Nebraska and San Diego State are the strongest competition," Gregory said.

Gregory likes Nebraska's chances, not only in this tournament, but in the NCAA tournament as well.

"They're ranked in the top four and legitimately so," he said. "They're a very strong team. They may be feeling a little more pressure this year than in the past because they really should make the Final Four. They have a strong net game and block and hit real well."

The Aztecs of San Diego State return all six starters from last year's 25-19 team.

Gregory's Oregon team has four returning and nine letter-winners. The Ducks finished 17-16 a year ago, and Monica Camp and Terri Kramer are among the key members of this veteran squad. Freshman Michele Krebsbach has made early contributions to the Ducks' 1-1 start, Gregory said.

Rhode Island is the mystery team of the tournament with only one letter-winner and no starters back from last season's 26-8, NCAA qualifiers. Coach Robert Schneck and the Rams will be an unknown factor heading into the competition, Gregory said.

"It's the toughest competition we've faced so far," he said.

The tough early season schedule is a new experience for Oregon.

"We usually have a tough home schedule with all the traditional powers in the Pacific Ten Conference," Gregory said, "but this will be good for us, facing opponents the quality of these three this early."

The action got underway last night with Oregon and Rhode Island squaring off, while tonight Rhode Island will turn around to face Nebraska and Oregon meets San Diego State. Three games are on tap for tomorrow with Nebraska and San Diego State opening things up before the Aztecs face Rhode Island and Nebraska battles Oregon.

Former Lincoln East High quarterback transferring from Iowa State to NU

Scott Crimmins, the former Lincoln East High School quarterback, is transferring from Iowa State to Nebraska, according to WOI-TV in Ames, Iowa.

Crimmins, a redshirt sophomore, is one of four reserve Iowa State football players who told WOI-TV they were transferring. The other three players are receiver Greg Buttz, defensive tackle Brad Henke and linebacker Tom Nigeling.

Crimmins, a 1983 Lincoln East graduate, led the Spartans to the Nebraska Class A football playoffs during his senior year. He was recruited by Nebraska to walk-on, but then signed with Iowa State in spring 1983.
