

Get a job at the Job Fair

Tired of searching classified ads, knocking on doors?

Lincoln employers will be in the Nebraska Union's Centennial Room from 8:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. today.

Lynn Ford, a Job Fair organizer, said she expects about 45 employers. The employers represent companies ranging from retail and restaurant to sales and home health care.

"We are looking for quality employers rather than quantity," Ford said. The Job Locator Office, she explained, chose Lincoln employers who have used the Job Locator Office to find student employees, hire often, and have a need for students.

"The employers who come are willing to work around students' schedules," Ford said. "Even if students aren't hired today, they can still gain experience in interviewing and make valuable future contacts."

Ford said making contacts was the key to several students' successes at last year's Job Fair. "I spoke with some students who were very pleased with jobs they obtained through contacts made at the Fair," Ford said.

UNL students respond to NCAA ruling

That decision is one of three options the NCAA has given Osborne. The other two include forfeiting a game or holding out 53 ineligible players for one game and another seven players for two games.

David Hiergesell, a senior psychology major, said he thought the punishment was "too severe," and thought Osborne should choose to forfeit the first game.

Matt Kluver, a freshman math major, said the options given Osborne were unfair. He suggested playing Kansas State with only freshmen.

Mike Rosenbloom, a junior majoring in business and marketing, called the NCAA action a "raw deal" and favored keeping 10 players out for the first six games.
