Police detain rally protestors

Brocker said he was standing in front of the group of Youth for Peace protestors chanting when he was taken away.

Brocker said the police grabbed him and threw him out of the auditorium. He said he realized that he doesn't have as much power as Reagan but thought he should be allowed to express himself.

Steinboch was removed from the auditorium as she protested the detention of Brocker. Several officers took her from the auditorium and a man in a pin-striped suit grabbed her by the neck as he helped take her from the room.

The man refused to give his name. "We have a right to say what we want to say," Steinboch said as she was taken from the auditorium. "This is anti-American."

"He (Reagan) has a right too," a policeman said.

Capt. C. M. Parker, Omaha Uniform Patrol, said they removed one individual from the auditorium because he was causing a disturbance and inciting others to cause a disturbance. When they were taking the individual from the auditorium two other people got involved, he said.

"We detained them, identified them and let them go," Parker said.

The three protestors were held in the V.I.P. room until the rally was over and then they were released.

The three protestors said the police are planning to contact their parents and tell them what happened.

Youth for Peace members were not the only people to protest during Reagan's speech.

Burt County farmer Dale Donneley said that he thinks the president's policies are promoting bankruptcy. He added that mandatory governmental control of the farming industry will keep farmers in Nebraska.

LaDonna McNear of Tekamah said that farmers from her area "tried to let Washington D.C. know we want different farm policies," but so far, McNear has not seen the kind of farm reform that she believes is needed.

McNear said that she supports amendments such as Initiative 300, and that she wants Nebraska to survive with family farms.

Reagan protestor Marylyn Felion of Omaha said that she was protesting Reaganomics and what it does to poor people. Felion said that she supports four veterans who are now on a water-only hunger strike against protesting U.S. policies in Nicaragua.

John Murphy, of Lincoln, carried a Helen Boosalis sign. Murphy said that he finds it hard to believe that Kay Orr is running for governor. He finds Boosalis to be "dynamic," and said that he is very concerned about the farm economy.

Union Board discusses Bookstore plan

By Kim Schwartz
 Staff Reporter

The Nebraska Union Board Wednesday discussed implementation of the Phase II Union Bookstore plan and passed a proposal designed to make banking more convenient for recognized student organizations using the Student Activities Financial Services Office.

Nebraska Union Board Director Daryl Swanson said the Phase II plan would extend the Nebraska Union's west wall by 40 feet, providing a basement extension of the University Bookstore, a lounge level recreation area, two second floor meeting rooms, and an auditorium. "The University Bookstore is paying for it (Phase II) because they owe us for obliterating the basement recreation area and meeting rooms," Swanson said.

Swanson also said the NU Board of Regents declared a moratorium a year and a half ago halting university construction because of economic problems.

Union Board Vice president Dave Cox said because the University Bookstore contracted to fund Phase II three years ago, the moratorium may not include the Phase II project.

"Since it's already been drafted up and planned for we feel there might be a loophole," Cox said.

Cox said the Union Board Planning Committee will determine whether or not the project can be completed despite the moratorium.

The proposals the Union Board ad-hoc committee studying SAFS services and that were charges submitted include SAFS improvement of its communication of information to student organizations. This would be done by sending SAFS services information and monthly statements to organization treasurers; SAFS publication or elimination of existing rules that inconvenience organizations and deter them from using SAFS services, and SAFS preparation of a zero-based budget that reflects a break-even philosophy but also the costs of SAFS activity.

The SAFS proposal would go into effect immediately.

In other business, the Union Board discussed enlarging the non-smoking section of the Harvest Room and placing a showcase in the city union for temporary display of student organization recognition awards.
