Top seniors honored UNL graduate featured at banquet

Lynne Grasz, manager of station services in the Television Information Office of the National Association of Broadcasters in New York City, will be the featured speaker during a banquet honoring top high school students from Nebraska and surrounding states Monday at UNL.

The event highlights UNL's third annual Distinguished Scholars Day.

The dinner, sponsored by the World-Herald, will recognize 240 of the top high school seniors from Nebraska plus selected scholars from surrounding states, their parents and the university's 1986 World-Herald Scholars, Susan Langford of Hastings and Jeff Fowler of Bellevue. The dinner begins at 6:30 p.m. in the Nebraska Union.

Other program participants will include UNL Chancellor Martin A. Masengale and G. Woodson Howe, vice president and executive editor of the Omaha World-Herald.

The event culminates a daylong program of academic and informational events sponsored by UNL, the World-Herald Foundation, the NU Foundation, the University of Nebraska Alumni Association and the UNL Student Alumni Association.

Also in 1984, Grasz was selected as one of 60 outstanding "Women in Communications." She is the recipient of any Emmy and a Broadcasters Promotion Association International Award of Excellence.

A 1966 journalism graduate of UNL, Grasz spent 10 years as director of promotion and public relations for KOLN-TV/KGIN-TV in Lincoln before joining CBS in 1976.

Deadline for McAuliffe Award extended

The Nebraska State Education Association has contributed $1,025 to support the new Christa McAuliffe award established at UNL.

The award will be given for the first time on the anniversary of the teacher-astronaut's death in January.

Dr. James O'Hanlon, dean of UNL's Teachers College, said the deadline for the McAuliffe award nominations has been extended until Nov. 14.

Teachers of kindergarten through 12th grade from any school in Nebraska are eligible for a cash award and plaque commemorating McAuliffe.

Nominations may be made by students, teachers, parents or others. Nomination letters, not exceeding two pages in length, should be sent to Dean James O'Hanlon, Teachers College, 61 Henzlik Hall, University of Nebraska-Lincoln, Lincoln, Neb. 68558-0439.
