

Mets bullpen coach Nebraskan

By Jeff Apel
Staff Reporter

With a cast that includes Clint Hurdle, Gene Tenace and Larry Haney, New York Mets bullpen coach Vern Hoscheit has earned the respect of the baseball world.

Hoscheit, who was born in Brunswick and now resides in Plainview during the off-season, said he has played a major role in the development of each of the three major-league catchers.

Without his help, Hoscheit said, it is difficult to predict where Haney, Tenace or Hurdle would have gone in their major-league careers.

"All it takes for a player to make the transition to catcher is the desire," Hoscheit said Wednesday. "If they don't have the desire, I just say, 'forget it.'"

Hoscheit said his fondness for developing major-league players can be traced back to 1941, his first year in minor-league baseball. Hoscheit defeated 13 other individuals for the starting catching position on the Norfolk baseball squad.

Following a rookie season in which he compiled a .284 average, Hoscheit spent his next season at Joplin, which was also a member of the Western Association.

World War II interrupted his playing for three years, but Hoscheit managed to resume his baseball career by splitting time the next two seasons between Binghamton in the Eastern League, Norfolk in the Piedmont League and Kansas City in the American Association.

In the following year, 1948, Hoscheit began his career as a player-manager for McAlester in the Sooner State League. It was during this time that Hoscheit equaled the feat accomplished by his longtime friend Casey Stengel by capturing five league championships.

Hoscheit closed out his playing career with Quincy of the Three-I League in 1955 but continued to manage that club until he was appointed manager of Greensboro in the Carolina League in 1958.

Hoscheit spent the next 10 years of his career as the president of the Three-I League and acting as a scout and coach for the Baltimore Orioles.

In 1969 Hoscheit joined the Oakland Athletics as an assistant coach. During this time the 64-year-old Hoscheit won the first three of his four World Series rings.

Before being appointed to his position with the Mets, Hoscheit was an assistant coach with the California Angels in 1976.

Hoscheit said he has been influenced by many individuals during his 45-year baseball career, especially Stengel and former American League President Lee McPhail.

Hoscheit said Stengel taught him the ropes of managing early in his career by allowing him to be his personal chauffeur during spring training. Hoscheit thus could attend meetings and obtain a better knowledge of the game.

McPhail told Hoscheit he would never be a major-league player, he said.
