Rec-building proposal tabled

Members of UNL's Faculty Senate on Tuesday tabled a motion opposing the proposal to build at UNL a combination recreation building and indoor football practice field.

Robert Furgason, vice chancellor for academic affairs, presented the recreation-center proposal to the senate. He issue on student fees.

donations and $3 million from the bond said the center would cost $16 million to $17 million. A combination of financing could be used, he said, including $10 million from a surcharge on the sale of football tickets, $3 million from

The proposal and an opposing statement presented by Sen. Louis Leviticus, professor of agricultural engineering, sparked discussion among senators.

Leviticus' statement read, "The faculty senate wishes to express its grave concern at the emphasis and support given to the sports and/or recreation program over and above the academic program. In these times when programs are being cut and research is being curtailed due to economic condition, the senate feels that it is politically unwise and academically inexcusable to divert any type of funding into the sports and/or recreation program."

"I'm wondering about the priorities of this body," said Sen. Marc Schniederjans, associate professor of management. Schniederjans said education should be a higher priority to the Faculty Senate than recreation. Other items of concern on campus such as parking problems also are being overlooked, he said.

Furgason responded that a recreation center would be a positive addition to the campus and would take no funding away from academic programs.

"If I thought there was a major diversion away from academic programs to do this, I, too, would be against it," he said.

Schniederjans said if UNL's facilities draw more potential students than its faculty, "then heaven help us."

Greg Dynek, ASUN representative to the Faculty Senate, said although he understands faculty members' financial concerns, it is necessary to improve student and faculty life on the campus through a recreation center.

"Maintaining physical fitness is a viable student concern," he said.
