the highest priority, while in the United States education is intertwined with athletics and social life.

Wan Suraya Ibrahim from Malaysia said one adjustment she had to make in coming to America was the way people greet each other on the street. In Malaysia women are taught to be conservative and not too outgoing, she said. Another adjustment was the lack of family life. Malaysian women continue to live with their families until they are married, she said, even if they have a career.

But despite the conservative way women behave, discrimination against women is not high, Ibrahim said. Women are paid equally with men, but as in most countries it is a little harder for women to climb to high positions, she said.

Sylvia Samuels described her situation as different from the other panelists. Samuels was born in India but grew up in the United States. Although she has spent most of her life in America, she maintains both her cultures. Samuels said women in India have careers, but mainly raise families. Samuels said her mother realized when she moved to America that she would have to be more independent and that there were more opportunities.

Samuels said she respects her culture and its beauty and takes the good parts of her culture to use in her own lifestyle.

Workshop for older students tonight

By Lynne Bomberger
Staff Reporter

A Workshop for Lincoln adults who want to attend UNL is scheduled for 6:30 p.m., tonight at the Division of Continuing Studies at 33rd and Holdrege streets.

The back-to-school workshop has been offered twice each year for the last 10 years, said Ruth Harper, coordinator of the workshop.

The workshop is directed at non-traditional, undergraduate students. These generally are students who are 25 or older and are starting college for the first time or who have been out of school for awhile, Harper said, but anyone is welcome.

The workshop, which is free and open to the public, is offered to help make the back-to-school transition easier. UNL representatives from the offices of financial aid, admissions, registration, and a variety of colleges will be available to answer questions and help ease the tension many non-traditional students feel, Harper said.

Harper, who is also a College Adult Counselor, said that people face many anxieties when they decide to go back to school. Many of the the common anxieties include time management, multiple roles to play in society, finances and a lack of self-assurance.

"Usually non-traditional students do very well," Harper said. "It usually turns out to be a positive experience for them."
