Magazine's editor named

By Lisa Hoffman
Staff Reporter

Hilda Raz is the new editor of the Prairie Schooner, UNL's internationally acclaimed literary magazine.

Raz, who will continue her duties as poetry editor, took over for Hugh Luke, editor since 1980. Luke continues as fiction editor.

Raz started as poetry editor in 1978. She has frequently attended the Breadloaf Writers Conference and was editor of the conference's daily newspaper, The Crumb. She became a board member of the Associated Writing Programs in 1986 and is the program's Publication Committee chairperson.

Raz said she hopes to continue the magazine's tradition of publishing new writers, along with the works of established authors.

"The mix has supported the magazine's prestige and reputation for 61 years and has brought attention to the university and the state," Raz said. She said the magazine continues to grow in reputation, and said she hopes to help continue that tradition.

The English department set up a new faculty advisory board Jan. 15 to support the magazine on an ongoing basis. The board will have a rotating membership so many members of the English department can serve. Board members are Lee Lemon, chairman; Steve Behrendt; and Barbara DiBernard. The quarterly, which has subscribers in all 50 states, every European country, India, Japan, Australia and New Zealand, recently was granted $10,000 from the National Endowment of the Arts to pay authors.

Raz said that Prairie Schooner was one of the top two literary magazines in an editors/writers poll by the Literary Magazine Review, even though it was one of the few magazines that had not paid its contributors. The money will help the magazine stay competitive, Raz said.

Prairie Schooner accepts entries all year. Submissions are first read by graduate students in the English department. Material is given recommendations for or against publication and then read by faculty volunteers, who are mostly senior graduate students and teaching assistants. The editors then make the final selections.

The magazine is planning a special fall issue in tribute to Loren Eiseley, a Nebraska scientist and poet, who will be inaugurated into the Nebraska Hall of Fame this fall on the 10th anniversary of his death. The special issue will include sections from Gale Christenson's biography of Eiseley and the eulogy given by Howard Nemerov the day of the funeral. Raz said she expects a wide readership for the issue because it should have special interests for Nebraskans.

Advance orders for the fall issue can be placed at Andrews 201 for $3.25 a copy.

Prairie Schooner presents awards in fiction, poetry

"The Prairie Schooner," literary magazine at UNL has announced the winners of three prizes for the best short story, poem and work by a beginning writer appearing in the quarterly publication in 1986.

Jacqueline Sits of Papillon, Ph.D. candidate at UNL received the Bertrice Slot Award for best work by a beginning writer. Her short stories were "Imaginary Lives" and "The Sea Snake." Winner of the 1986 Wendell graduate award and Regents scholarships, Sits has had numerous stories published in literary magazines.

Omaha native Ben Hansen, who teaches at the University of Arizona, won the Katherine Foundation Award for the best poem of the year, "Reflections." The magazine's special award for the best work by a beginning writer was given to the University of Iowa's Harper's magazine. Hansen also published two books, "Leprosy" and "The Assassination of Jesse James by the Coward Robert Ford."

Alicia Ostricker, a poet-critic and professor at Rutgers University, won the Francis and Rosemary Award for best poem. She received the award for her portfolio called "Surviving."
