"Duty and desire collide in dramatic fashion," in this University Theatre production of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," according to visiting professional director Gav'n Cameron-Webb of New York City. "I've placed the production in Victorian times," said Cameron-Webb, "a time when social custom, law and religion required a proper, dutiful code of conduct. The wandering in the woods by the play's young lovers, creates an even greater contrast for as they slip further away from the constraints of duty, they slide deeper into the woods of desire."
